The big coal sheds of Nelson Osterlander, with contents, were burned to the ground, Saturday morning. The loss will be $3,000, with about half that insurance. The fire started at 2:35 a. m., and it is believed it originated from some one lighting a match inside. THE SEPTEMBER ROD AND GUN.
The large and ever growing army of game bird hunters will find ample variety in stories dealing with their favorite recreation in the September issue of Rod and Gun in Canada, published by W. J. Taylor Limited, Woodstock, Ontario. From Newfoundland, to British Columbia is a wide range and all is included in this one number. The differences in the sport enjoyed in the various Provinces being pleasantly conveyed in a series of stories dealing with actual occurrences in the field. Further variety is given by a finely illustrated story of the Cruise of the Papoose, a camping story, and some excellent verses. Geese, ducks and prairie chickens afford the very best of sport and their devotees tell of the complete enjoyment experienced in a way to make their confederates resolve to make similar trips with the same object in view. Wing shooting is a sportsmanlike occupation and with only fair conservation there should be ample opportunities for all sportsmen in Canada to enjoy some of this fine recreation for an indefinite time to come. A more interesting number of this fine Magazine has never been issued.

NEWS NOTES.

The Ontario elections may take place before another session is held. Some say they will be held in November.

John Waldron, of Washago, Ont., a deputy returning officer in the late election, took his ballot box home. He was found on Saturday morning on the floor of his house badly battered up, and the ballot box missing.

Earl Barnes, seven years of age, is in a hospital at Chicago, suffering from rabies. The doctors can do nothing for him. He will be kept under the influence of chloroform until he dies, as the doctors say it would be cruel to allow him to suffer.

J. A. McMillan, M. P., for Glen-garry County, was in Ottawa for a few days at the latter end of last week and made the statement that it was his intention to ask Hon. Geo. P. Graham, minister of railways and canals, who was at the last election defeated in his own constituency, of Brockville, to accept his seat.

There promises to be a wonderful crop of apples in Prince Edward county this season. The packers are busy now and have been for about two weeks. A large number of young orchards have come on well this season, and the crop is expected to be the biggest and best that Prince Edward has put on the market in many years. Prices, too, are unusually high.

A broken neck is merely an incident of the day's work with Alexander McLeod, Canadian aviator, who is reported rapidly recovering in the West Pullman hospital, Chicago following a fall last week, when it was ascertained McLeod's neck was broken in two

MILLINERY OPENINGS

DOXSEE & CO.

The Millinery opening of Doxsee & Co., Saturday attracted a large number of ladies, who expressed themselves as delighted with the handsome display of beautiful creations from the leading centres of fashion. For a number of years Doxsee & Co. have occupied a commanding position for distinctive and smart Millinery, and the exhibit this season, both as regards variety and quality, is fully up to the high standard set up in former years.

In colors, purples, greens, blues, tans and Black and white effects are particularly popular and fur will be used much in trimming. One of the novelties of the season is color embroidered effects, worked in wool. In some instances this is carried out to give the effect of feathers.

Hats are for the most part smaller this year, with high crown and turned up and rolling brims. A small hat with rolling brim faced underneath with silver, the top was white trimmed with puffs of black and yellow velvet over the crown and banded around with grey veils.

Among the larger hats is one in royal blue, faced in black with royal blue feathers, making a contrast at once striking and artistic. Another a poke shape rolled up high at the back, faced with black velvet, the top covered with lamb and finished at the back with a cluster of feathers, made a very pretty effect.

ROBINSON CO'S DISPLAY.

Saturday evening our reporter accepted a special invitation to visit the Robinson Company's Fall Opening exhibit. It was a merry and much interested gathering we found. All the various departments were on dress parade. Each had a wealth of new merchandise to display. Main aisle display featured the dress goods and silks with suitable trimmings to match. The centre store was largely used for display of beautiful linens. The well-known Irish makes, such as "Gold Medal" and "Old Bleach," were much in evidence. Going to the first floor up we were ushered into the new Carpet and Home Furnishing Department. It is no wonder the homes of this district are so well furnished when they have such a well equipped department to draw upon for supplies. The adjoining section is filled to overflowing with a mammoth collection of Women's ready-to-wear garments, silk lined evening cloaks, fur collar opera cloaks, fancy dresses, fancy waists, full coats, costumes, skirts, fur coats, fur neckwear and muffs, etc., were each elaborately used to demonstrate the immense stocks carried by the Robinson Co.

The millinery department was well worth a visit. Any woman should be able to find a hat to suit her this season as there are so many different styles to choose from. The predominating colors are emerald green, coronation red, royal blue and royal purple. Willow plumes, maribon mounts, wings and feather flowers were used profusely along with the handsome ribbons. The display of children's hats were beautiful and we were glad to see that the little ones were not forgotten.

LETTERS OF A SON IN THE MAKING TO HIS DAD.

—By REX McEVROY

[Mr. McEvoy will write for this paper a series of letters from the west. They will appear from time to time under the above heading, and will give a picture of the great Canadian west from the standpoint of a young Ontario man going out there to make his way. These letters should be full of interest for every Ontario father.]

Calgary, Aug. 27th, 1911

My Dear Dad:—

Since I wrote you from Winnipeg I have left the prairies behind me. Today, about forty-five miles before reaching Calgary, I had my first sight of the Rocky Mountains. They lay low along the Western horizon, like clouds. The only way you could tell they were not clouds was because they did not change their shape. On the prairies I saw Indians, looking very civilized with their Bain waggons, cowboys, and mounted policemen, but I must tell everything in its turn. Before I go any further, I want to ask you to be sure to send me the newspaper from home. I feel just like Bill Dodson, whom I met in Winnipeg. He was telling me that whenever he got a paper from home, it was just like meeting an old friend, because it told him all about the folks he knew. His father gave him a subscription for a year as a Christmas present, and he said he couldn't have had anything that would have pleased him more. If I decide to stay out here, and anybody at home should want to give me something for Christmas, they might think about this. Don't wait till Christmas to send me the paper, though, please.

Say, Dad, if you saw the threshing machines that were round the railroad sidings at Winnipeg waiting to be shipped to the prairies you wouldn't wonder that people in the west boom their country. These machines, loaded on flat cars, or standing like batteries of guns waiting to be shipped, reminded me of the South African war pictures of shipping guns and ammunition to the front. There is just as much hustle here. At the station, all along the line, are more machines waiting to be unloaded, and empty box cars are being collected on the sidings to move the crop out. Everybody says that it is to be a bumper crop this year, and bigger than ever before. What you can see from the train certainly looks good. They have got cutting well under way now.

It's funny the way the towns out west advertise. You frequently come to towns where sign boards have been erected at the stations telling of the advantages the place has to offer settlers. Back at Port Arthur they had an attractive little one-story brick building, what is called a kiosk, which is a bureau of information. At Port William there was a big sign: "Fort William the Pulse of the Dominion: the bulk of East and West traffic passes through this town." There is another big sign there, but there is so much crowded on it, and the print was so small that I could not read it from the train. Indian Head is another place that advertises in this way. On one side of the track is the sign: "In-

CLOSE QUARTERS;

OR, THE HOUSE IN THE
RUE BARBETTE

CHAPTER I.—(Cont'd)

His lordship knitted his brows and smoked in silence. At last he found utterance.

"That's a good idea of yours. It makes things easier. Well, first of all, Edith and I became engaged. Edith is the daughter of the late Admiral Talbot. She and Jack, her brother, live with their uncle, General Sir Hubert Fitzjames, at 118, Ulster Gardens. Jack is in the Foreign Office; he is just like Edith, awfully clever and that sort of thing, an assistant secretary I think they call him. Now we're getting on, aren't we?"

"Splendidly."

"That's all right. About a month ago a chap turns up from Constantinople, a kind of special Envoy from the Sultan, and he explains to the Foreign Office that he has in his possession a lot of uncut diamonds of terrific value, including one as big as a duck's egg, to which no figures would give a price. Do you follow me?"

"Each word."

"Good. Well—I can't tell you why, because I don't know, and I could not understand it if I did—there was some political importance attached to these gems, and the Sultan roped our Foreign Office into it. So the Foreign Office placed Jack in charge of the business. He fixed up the Envoy in the house at Albert Gate, got a lot of diamond cutters, and machinery for him, gave him into the charge of all the smart policemen in London; and what do you think is the upshot?"

"What?"

"The Envoy, his two secretaries, and a confidential servant were murdered the night before last, the diamonds were stolen, and Jack has vanished—absolutely gone clean into space, not a sign of him to be found anywhere. Yesterday Edith sends for me, cries for half an hour, tells me I'm the best fellow that ever lived, and then I'm jiggered if she didn't wind up by saying that she couldn't marry me."

The earl of Fairholme was now worked up to fever heat. He would not calm down for an appreciable period, so Brett resolved to try the effect of curiosity.

He wrote a telegram to Lord Northallerton:—

"Very sorry, but I cannot leave town at present. Please ask me later. Will explain reason for postponement when we meet."

He had touched the dominant note in mankind.

"Surely!" cried the earl, "you have not already decided upon a course of action?"

"Not exactly. I am wiring to postpone a shooting fixture."

"What a beastly shame!" exclaimed the other, in whom the sporting instinct was at once aroused. "I'm awfully sorry my affairs should interfere with your arrangements in this way."

"Not a bit," cried Brett. "I make it a sacred rule of my life to put hole, buckskin gloves, patent leathers, all complete. Footmen ain't in it with the force, nowadays."

James expanded his magnificent waistcoat with a heavy sigh over this philosophical dictum, the poignancy of which was enhanced by his knowledge that the upper housemaid had taken to conversing with a mounted policeman in the Park during her afternoons off.

The apartment in which Brett found himself gave ready indications of the character of its tenants. Tod's "Rajasthan" jostled a volume of the Badminton Library on the bookshelves, a copy of the Allahabad Pioneer lay beside the Field and the Times on the table, and many varieties of horns made trophies with quaint weapons on the walls.

A complete edition of Ruskin, and some exquisite prints of Rossetti's best known works, supplied a different set of emblems whilst the room generally showed signs of daily occupation.

"An Anglo-Indian uncle, artistic niece," was the barrister's rapid comment, but further analysis was prevented by the entrance of Miss Edith Talbot.

The surprise of the pair was mutual.

Brett expected to see a young, pretty and clever girl, vain enough to believe she had brains, and sufficiently well endowed with that rare commodity to be able to twist the good-natured Earl of Fairholme round her little finger.

Young, not more than twenty—unquestionably beautiful, with the graceful contour and delicate balanced features of a portrait by Romney—Edith Talbot bore few of the marks that pass current as the outward and visible signs of a modern woman of Society. That she should be self-possessed and dressed in perfect taste were as obvious adjuncts of her character as that each phase of her clear thought should reflect itself in a singularly mobile face.

To such a woman pretence was impossible, the polite fictions of fashionable life impossible. Brett readily understood why the Earl of Fairholme had fallen in love with this fair creature. He had simply bent in worship before a goddess of his own creed.

To the girl, Brett was equally a revelation.

Fairholme's introductory note described the barrister as "the smartest criminal lawyer in London—one whose aid would be invaluable." She expected to meet a sharp-featured, wizened, elderly man, with gold-rimmed eye-glasses, a queer voice and a nasty habit of asking unexpected questions.

In place of this commonplace personality, she encountered a handsome, well-groomed gentleman—one who won confidence by his intellectual face, and detained it by invisibly establishing a social equality. Fortunately, there is yet in Britain an aristocracy wherein good birth is synonymous with good ed, Miss Talbot. If the criminals did not scruple to leave four dead men behind, they would not draw the line at a fifth. The clear inference is that your brother is alive, but under restraint."

"I can see that it is possible he was alive until some time after the tragedy at Albert Gate. But—but—what connection can Jack have with the theft of diamonds worth millions? These people used him as their tool in some manner. Why should they spare him when success had crowned their efforts?"

"We are conversing in riddles. Will you explain?"

"You know that my brother is an assistant Under-Secretary in the Foreign Office?" "Yes."

"Well, early in September his chief placed him in charge of a special undertaking. The Sultan had decided to have a large number of rough diamonds cut and polished by the best European experts. They were all magnificent gems, exceedingly valuable it seems, being rare both in size and purity; but one of them was larger than any known diamond. Jack told me it was quite as big as a good-sized hen's egg. Both it and the others, he said, had the appearance of lumps of alum; but the experts said that the smaller stones were worth more than a million sterling, whilst the price of the large one could not be fixed. No one but an Emperor or Sultan would buy it. His Excellency Mehemet Ali Pasha was the special envoy charged with this mission, and he brought credentials to the Foreign Office asking for facilities to be given for its execution. He and the two secretaries who accompanied him have been killed."

"Yes!" said Brett, whose eyes were fixed on the hearthrug.

"Jack was given the especial duty of looking after Mehemet Ali and his companions during their residence in London. It was his business to afford them every assistance in his power, to procure them police protection, obtain for them the best advice attainable in the diamond trade, and generally place at their disposal all the resources which the British Government itself could command if it undertook such a curious task. He had been with them about a month—not hourly engaged, you understand, as once the preliminary arrangements were made, he had little further trouble—but he used to call there every morning and afternoon to see if he could render any assistance. Matters had progressed so favorably until the day before yesterday, that in another month he hoped to see the last of them. He was always saying that he would be glad when the business was ended, as he did not like to be officially connected with the fate of a few little bits of stone that happened to be so immensely valuable."

formation. At Port William there was a big sign: "Port William the Pulse of the Dominion: the bulk of East and West traffic passes through this town." There is another big sign there, but there is so much crowded on it, and the print was so small that I could not read it from the train. Indian Head is another place that advertises in this way. On one side of the track is the sign: "Indian Head, Saskatchewan's Beauty Spot. Good land $20 to $50 per acre." Across the track on the other side is a sign which reads: "Dominion Government forest nursery, 480 acres, one mile from town: Distributed annually, 3,000,000 trees free to settlers. Visitors can inspect at any time." You would think that if these towns wanted to advertise they would do it in Ontario papers. Of course, thousands of people read the signs by the railroad track, but by the time they see them they have tickets to their destination and are not likely to stop off.

Out from Winnipeg the country is as flat as a table, and the horizon is as straight as the edge of a ruler. It surprised me to find out that between Winnipeg and Portage La Prairie, which is fifty-six miles west, there is a rise of 100 feet. Portage has a population of 7,000, and is quite a town, and one of Manitoba's principal grain markets. There are elevators there, of course, and from there west for a long way there are elevators at all the stations. There will be two or three elevators at each station, belonging to different companies. To a newcomer from Ontario these elevators, so many of them, are strange, and they are all the more noticeable because the country is so flat and there are no big trees. The elevators can be seen for miles.

At Brandon I laid eyes on the first Northwest Mounted policeman I ever saw. They wear red coats, just like those of the dragoons we saw in Toronto, and cow-boy hats. It is said that the red coats were made part of the uniform of the police by Sir John Macdonald because the Indians among whom the police had their most difficult work always looked on the soldiers of the Queen as their friends. A red-coat would be trusted where anyone else would meet only distrust and suspicion. The most prominent building from the Brandon station, is a seed warehouse, and this is another indication of the character of the West. And the fact that they go in for agriculture wholesale is shown by the advertisements to be seen offering "plowing engines" for sale. The plowing is done by engines on the big farms. Out on the prairies I saw great big galvanized iron tanks, which I thought must be for holding gasoline for running the plowing engines, but a man on the train said that these were portable granaries into which the grain is put as it is threshed, until it can be taken in to the elevators.

My, the prairies are lonely. You can look from the train window and get a wide sweep for miles and miles, and perhaps there will only be one house in the whole landscape. And there are no fences to show that anybody has made their home there. The rail fences, such as we have about the old place, you never see out here; wood is too scarce. Why, the only place about which there was a fence in some of the towns was the lumberyard, and this was sure to be protected with a high fence. Wood is so valuable that they say people lock their kindling in safes before going to bed.

Bye-bye for the present.
Your loving son,

Truth may win in the long run, but a lie is more of a sprinter.

Minard's Liniment for sale everywhere.

The success of one may mean the failure of many.

"Not exactly. I am writing to postpone a shooting fixture."

"What a beastly shame!" exclaimed the other, in whom the sporting instinct was at once aroused. "I'm awfully sorry my affairs should interfere with your arrangements in this way."

"Not a bit," cried Brett. "I make it a sacred rule of my life to put pleasure before business. I mean," he explained, as a look of bewilderment crossed his hearer's face, "that this quest of ours promises to be the most remarkable affair I have ever been engaged in. That pleases me. Pleasant-shooting is a serious business, governed by the callendar and arranged by the head-keeper."

An electric bell summoned Smith. The barrister handed him the telegram and a sovereign.

"Read that message," he said.

"Ponder over it. Send it, and give the change of the sovereign to Mrs. Smith's brother, with my compliments and regrets."

CHAPTER II.

Then he turned to Lord Fairholme.

"Just one question," he said, "before I send you off to bed. No, you must not protest. I want you to meet me here this evening at seven, with your brain clear and your nerves restored by a good, sound sleep. We will dine, here or elsewhere, and act subsequently. But at this moment I want you to know the name of the person most readily accessible who can tell me all about Mr. Talbot's connection with the Sultan's agent."

"His sister, undoubtedly. Where can I find her?"

"At Ulster Gardens. I will drive you there."

The barrister smiled. "You are going to bed, I tell you. Give me a few lines of introduction to Miss Talbot."

The earl's face had brightened at the prospect of meeting his fiancée under the favorable conditions of Brett's presence. But he yielded with good grace, and promptly sat down to write a briefnote explanatory of the barrister's identity and position in the inquiry.

The two parted at the door, and a hansom rapidly brought Brett to the residence of Sir Hubert Fitzjames.

A stately footman took Reggie's card and its accompanying letter, placed them on a salver with a graceful turn of his wrist, which oddly suggested a similar turn in his nose, and said:

"Miss Talbot is not at home, sir."

"Yes, she is," answered Brett, paying the driver of the hansom.

The footman deigned to exhibit astonishment. Here was a gentleman—one obviously accustomed to the manners of Society—who declined to accept the courteous disclaimer of an unexpected visit.

"Miss Talbot is not receiving visitors," he explained.

"Exactly. Take that card and the letter to Miss Talbot and bring me the answer."

Jeames was no match for his antagonist. He silently showed the way into a reception room and disappeared. A minute later he announced, with much deference, that Miss Talbot would see Mr. Brett in the library, and he conducted this mysterious visitor upstairs.

On rejoining Buttons in the hall he solemnly observed:

"That's a swell cop who is with the missus—shining topper, button-asking unexpected questions.

In place of this commonplace personality, she encountered a handsome, well-groomed gentleman—one who won confidence by his intellectual face, and detained it by invisibly establishing a social equality. Fortunately, there is yet in Britain an aristocracy wherein good birth is synonymous with good breeding—a freemasonry whose pass-words cannot be simulated, nor its membership bought.

Brett read the wonder in the girl's eyes, and hastened to explain.

"The Earl of Fairholme," said Brett, "thought I might be of some service in the matter of your brother's strange disappearance. Miss Talbot. I am not a professional detective, but my friends are good enough to believe that I am very successful in unravelling mysteries that are beyond the ken of Scotland Yard. I have heard something of the facts in this present affair. Will you trust me so far as to tell me all the facts that is known to you personally?"

"My uncle, General Fitzjames, has just gone to Scotland Yard," she began timidly.

"Quite so. Perhaps you prefer to await his return?"

"Oh, no, I do not mean that. But it is so hard to know how best to act. Uncle expects the police to accomplish impossibilities. He says that they should long since have found out what has become of Jack. Perhaps they may resent my interference."

"My interference, to be exact," said Reggie, with the pleasant smile that had fascinated so many women. Even Edith Talbot was not wholly proof against its magic.

"I personally have little faith in them," she confessed.

"I have none."

"Well, I will do as you advise."

"Then I recommend you to take me into your confidence. I know Scotland Yard and its methods. We do not follow the same path."

"I believe in you and trust you," said the girl.

So ingenious was the look from the large, deep eyes which accompanied this declaration of confidence, that many men would have pronounced Miss Talbot to be an experienced flirt. Brett knew better. He simply bowed his acknowledgments.

"What is it that you want to know?" she continued. "We ourselves are no better informed than the newspapers as to what has actually happened, save that four men have been killed as the result of a carefully planned robbery. As for my brother—"

She paused and strove hard to force back her tears.

"Your brother has simply vanishing and Thumb Rings.

In the tombs of ancient Egypt the earliest rings known to history are found. The finest and most costly are of pure gold and of simple design, but very massive, while the name of the owner is deeply cut on an oblong gold bezel.

The lower classes had rings of silver, glass, bronze or even clay with a glazed surface, the inscriptions on the last being very often impressed while the clay was still moist. Other rings have been found made of ivory, cornelian and amber. Under the later dynasties a scarab was used in place of the bezel, which was so mounted as to allow it to revolve.

Signet rings were greatly in favor among the Greeks and were set as a rule with engraved gems. In Sparta a curious law was passed which forbade the use of any metal other than iron in their composition, says the London Globe, but this law applied to Sparta only. There is now in the British Museum an Etrurian ring which is formed of two minutely modelled lions whose bodies make the hoop, their paws holding a scarab engraved with a lion.

In Rome ambassadors were the first allowed to wear rings of gold, and then they might only be worn on state occasions. Next Senators, Consuls and Equites had the honor conferred upon them, and so on until at length Justinian withdrew in its entirety the jus annuli aurei.

Many fine examples of episcopal rings are in existence, owing to the custom of burying these rings with their owners. The ring was conferred with great solemnity upon the newly-made bishop at the same time as the crozier, and the Pontifical had a formula inserted especially for this ceremony. This ring was worn over the bishop's glove, generally on the forefinger of the right hand, but in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries bishops not infrequently wore several rings on the right hand, as well as a large jewel that was fixed in the back of each glove.

During the Middle Ages cramp rings were much worn as a preventative of that disease. Their healing power was derived from their being blessed by the King, for which a special form of service was used, and a great many rings were consecrated at one and the same time. Although this idea is a relic of the dark ages it lingers in no uncertain fashion still, for the Mizpah rings of to-day and others like them claim the same virtue and are sold by the gross.

Posy rings, although of early date, are even yet occasionally met with, in the country especially. They are so called because of the "posy" engraved upon them; usually a doggerel verse or else some trite saying of the type beloved of the sentimental young woman of all time, as "forget-me-not," and so on.

In the seventeenth century a somewhat morbid taste in rings was evinced by the custom of wearing memorial or mourning rings bearing the name and date of the death of the departed. These were often of elaborate design, enamelled in black and white, and a pleasantly suggestive ring of this type, at one time very popular, was formed of two skeletons bent along the hoop and holding a coffin on which the name and date was engraved.

Thumb rings, which must have been very ungainly and ugly, were poison while the great conqueror was sweeping victoriously over Europe. Nothing, not even the morbid microbe, can resist troops who believe themselves to be invincible.

Victory is the most powerful of restoratives and the deepest anaesthetics. Legless members of the Old Guard crowded into an ambulance would at sight of the Emperor rise on their stumps to salute him. After Eylau Larrey operated uninterruptedly for thirty-six hours, and he reports how the soldiers seemed unconscious of their own troubles, lost in thought of the glory of their leader, and maimed as they were lending their best aid to fellow patients.

At Borodino Larrey disarticulated the shoulder of a Colonel, who immediately set out for France on foot, where he arrived after three months walking. After fording the Beresina river in Russia, Gen. Zayonchek, 75 years old, had his kneecap shattered by a bullet; amputation was performed in three minutes in a violent snowstorm and in bitterly cold weather, yet the white haired officer was placed in a sledge and taken to Vilna, where he died at the age of 86 years.

FOUND RIGHT PATH.

After a False Start.

"In 1890 I began to drink coffee. At that time I was healthy and enjoyed life. At first I noticed no bad effects from the indulgence, but in course of time found that various troubles were coming upon me.

"Palpitation of the heart took unto itself sick and nervous headaches, kidney troubles followed and eventually my stomach became so deranged that even a light meal caused me serious distress.

"Our physician's prescriptions failed to help me and then I dosed myself with patent medicines till I was thoroughly disgusted and hopeless.

"Finally I began to suspect that coffee was the cause of my troubles. I experimented by leaving it off, except for one small cup at breakfast. This helped some, but did not altogether relieve my distress. It satisfied me, however, that I was on the right track.

"So I gave up coffee altogether and began to use Postum. In ten days I found myself greatly improved, my nerves steady, my head clear, my kidneys working better and better, my heart's action rapidly improving, my appetite improved and the ability to eat a hearty meal without subsequent suffering restored to me. And this condition remains.

"Leaving off coffee and using Postum did this, with no help from drugs, as I abandoned the use of medicines when I began to use the food drink." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

"Did you see sharks when you crossed the ocean, Mr. Spiffkins?" asked Miss Purling. "Yes," replied Spiffkins, sadly; "I played cards with a couple."

"It does to me," said Donald, drawing a long breath. "I wish I lived on a farm, Uncle Philip."

Minard's Liniment Cures Dandruff.

Honestly, now, isn't it the things that are none of your business that keep your curiosity working overtime?

If attacked with cholera or summer complaint of any kind send at once for a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial and use it according to directions. It acts with wonderful rapidity in subduing that dreadful disease that weakens the strongest man and that destroys the young and delicate. Those who have used this cholera medicine say it acts promptly, and never fails to effect a thorough cure.

POOR FATHER.

He—"I am afraid your father will object."

She—"Don't worry. Papa hasn't much influence in our family."

It is a fact beyond dispute that one packet of Wilson's Fly Pads has killed a bushel of house flies. This is more than could possibly be caught on three hundred sheets of sticky paper. All Druggists, Grocers and General Stores sell Wilson's Fly Pads. Be sure you get the genuine Wilson's.

The country grocer was issuing instructions to his new assistant. "It's only by looking closely after the trifles," said the proprietor, "that a profit can be made in these days of sharp competition." "Yessir," came from the boy. "For example," continued the grocer, "when you pick flies out of the sugar, don't throw them away. Dust the sugar off their feet and put 'em among the currants."

The Friend of All Sufferers. — Like to "the shadow of a rock in a weary land" is Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil to all those who suffer pain. It holds out hope to every one and realizes it by stilling suffering everywhere. It is a liniment that has the blessings of half a continent. It is on sale everywhere and can be found wherever enquired for.

THAT WAS ALL—BUT—

While driving along a country road a man saw the roof of a farmer's house ablaze. He gesticulated and called to the farmer's wife, who was calmly standing in the doorway:

"Hey, your house is afire!"

"What?" she bawled out.

"I say, your house is afire!"

"What did y' say? I'm a little deaf!"

"Your house is afire!" again yelled the man at the top of his lungs.

"Oh, is that all?" calmly replied the woman.

"It's all I can think of just now," responded the man in a rather weak voice as he drove on.

If your luck isn't what it should be, write a "p" in front of it and try again.

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

Wandering over a field one day, a man came across a large stone inscribed: "Turn me over."

After much difficulty he succeeded in turning it over and found on the other side of the stone the words: "Now turn me back again so that I may catch some other idiot."

Relief for the Depressed.—Physical and mental depression usually have their origin in a disordered state of the stomach and liver, as when these organs are deranged in their action the whole system is affected. Try Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. They revive the digestive processes, act beneficially on the nerves and restore the spirits as no other pills will. They are cheap, simple and sure, and the effects are lasting.

Costiveness and its Cure.—When the excretory organs refuse to perform their functions properly the intestines become clogged. This is known as costiveness and if neglected gives rise to dangerous complications. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will effect a speedy cure. At the first intimation of this ailment the sufferer should procure a packet of the pills and put himself under a course of treatment. The good effects of the pills will be almost immediately evident.

ESTIMATING TIME.

It is not common to find a person who can correctly estimate the lapse of a single second. But in these days of speeding automobiles the exact time when each of two colliding vehicles must have occupied particular spots may be a matter of great importance. In a recent experiment a car took nearly two seconds to stop after brakes were applied and in that time it moved nineteen feet. So even fractions of a second are important. One can train himself to estimate even tenths of a second. Try it with a watch and it will be found that it is just possible to count ten in the lapse of a single second. But one must count fast to do it.

THE PUBLIC LEAD FOR THEM

FAMOUS CRIMINALS WHO OBTAINED REPRIEVES.

Many Instances in England Where They Were Saved From the Gallows.

"Nothing rouses the British public like a sense of injustice done to a fellow-creature," said Sir William Harcourt while he was Home Secretary; and not infrequently prisoners have found themselves the subjects of extraordinary demonstrations in their behalf, says London Answers.

Nearly 80,000 persons signed the petition in favor of Daisy Lord, the poor girl recently released after eighteen months of imprisonment. She had been condemned to the gallows for the death of her child in the most pitiable circumstances. In thousands of homes the story of her sorrow, of her despair, of her frenzy, had touched the heart and awakened people to sympathy with her and to indignation at what one of our most distinguished judges once described as an "antiquated and monstrous legal form" which had dictated the cruel sentence passed upon her.

MRS. MAYBRICK GUILTY.

That news spread through the country one August morning in 1889 aroused thousands of readers of her trial to protest. The night had hardly closed upon the spreading of the news before petitions were being prepared and circulated through the country for signature, praying that the wretched lady might be saved from the scaffold. When completed, the Maybrick petition was the most extraordinary one for a prisoner these islands have ever seen. It bore no fewer than close upon a million signatures, including those of fifty-two members of the House of Commons. One of the most remarkable features of the Maybrick appeal was that something like 35 per cent. of the signatures were those of women.

PARDON FOR KITTY BIRON.

At eleven o'clock one December night, eight years ago, a cab drove up to the entrance of Holloway Prison and a man leapt out. He was a messenger from the Home Office bearing a sealed despatch from the Home Secretary for immediate delivery into the hands of the governor of the prison. A few moments later the governor, the chaplain, and the head wardress were tramping down the dismal corridors of the prison to the cell in which was confined Miss Kitty Biron, the young girl condemned to death a few days previously for the killing of a stockbroker whom she had encountered in the street and mortally wounded with a knife before the spectators could rush to his rescue. Thousands of people hurried to append their names to the petitions in her favor. Even on the Stock Exchange itself people hustled one another to sign the appeal for mercy, and in less than a week 500,000 men and women were pleading on her behalf. The Home Secretary anticipated the presentation of the petition by commuting the sentence, but later on the mon-solate free pardon. The others were saved from the gallows.

ARE PETITIONS USELESS?

Do petitions in behalf of prisoners have any effect? Some persons have questioned it. But there is really no doubt that a petition, largely signed and urging reasonable grounds for revision of a sentence, has considerable weight with a Home Secretary.

"What the public brain thinks and the public heart feels," Sir Richard Cross is said to have remarked to a legal gentleman who sneered at a petition he had received, "is worth attention. I shall never turn a deaf ear to a voice pleading for mercy. I will listen and consider though I may in the end be unable to agree with it."

ROYAL TREASURES.

A Peep at the Contents of Buckingham Palace Vaults.

On the basement floor at Buckingham Palace are three vaults, the contents of which are worth a fabulous amount of money, and which are guarded with immense care.

In these vaults are stored accumulations of treasures which have come into the possession of the Royal Family in different ways during the past fifty or sixty years, and for which it is impossible to find room in the apartments, corridors, or halls of the Royal residences, as they are already filled to their full capacity with armor, statuary, and various valuable works of art.

Two of these treasure vaults are of immense size; one, nearly square, has a floor space of 300ft. by 280 ft., and runs under the State apartments on the first floor. There is a passage leading into it outside the Bow Room which looks out on the gardens, but the entrance to this passage was covered over in Queen Victoria's reign.

The second vault is somewhat smaller than the first; the third has only a floor space of 30ft. by 10ft. This vault is steel-lined throughout, and it is here that the gold and silver ornaments and other small valuables for which there is no room in the Royal palaces are stored. In the two large vaults, which, by the way, are absolutely air-tight, and heated by radiators, are kept the larger treasures, such as statues, big pictures, etc.

Probably the contents of the smallest vault equal in value all that is stored in the other two. The weight of the gold ornaments alone—they are made of the purest metal—is said to be over a ton. There are over six thousand of these. But the weight of many of these ornament bears no relation to their value. There are, for example, half a dozen grotesque Arabic figures not more than a couple of inches in height whose united weight is probably less than one pound; they were a present to Queen Victoria from an envoy from the Persian Court, and are reputedly near a thousand years old. In the open market these figures would probably fetch $10,000 apiece.

All the wonderful wealth of gold and silver in this vault is placed on tray-tables; each table is fitted with four trays, one over the other, and as the articles accumulate more trays are added to the tables. In Queen Victoria's reign the tables contained only two trays. Every

CONCERNING STOWAWAYS

ONLY REMAINING CLASS FROM DAYS OF SEA ROMANCE.

Adventurer Complained of the Food—Husband Shipped as a Gown.

We are a seafaring nation, and yet we have allowed the romance of the sea to disappear bit by bit until we find ourselves at the beginning of the twentieth century almost destitute of the romantic figures that roved the salt waters in happier sailor days, writes Rose Henniker Heaton in the London Standard.

True, we made short work of pirates when we caught them, and swung them up at the yardarm for all the world to see. Those were brave days, when Blake was chasing these gentlemen adventurers upon the high seas, and they were brave days, too, when Captain Kidd and his tatterdemalion rabble were hoisting their black flag in defiance of man and God.

But the pirates and the King's men have alike gone to their last rest, and may their souls find peace.

So much for the pirates, but what of Father Neptune? It would seem that his throne is sharing in the general shakiness of that of other monarchs, and he bids fair shortly to be deposed altogether. For my part I am not a lover of practical jokes such as dittinguish his court, and one wonders if his waning popularity is due to a more refined humor than that which flourished in the days when Merry England was Merry England. Tar brush for shaving brush, tin-plate for razor, and a final ducking—they were a robust company that enjoyed those rites.

Thanks to improved nautical charts, we are gradually decreasing the ranks of gaunt, wild-eyed human beings who sat on the lonely shore whispering and muttering to themselves, until a passing merchantman, singing a fluttering pennant, sent a boat's crew to bring the castaways aboard. "A sail! A sail!"—the cry of these unfortunate—echoes in one's heart for days after reading their tale of horrors and deprivations. I say deprivations advisedly, because it was not given to everyone to possess the inventive genius of themembers of the Swiss Family Robinson, nor were others equally fortunate in breaking upon an island bearing a striking resemblance to the Stores!

And of all this vast company of sea-folk the stowaway alone has survived. To him, and to him only, can we look for romance and poetry. Yet it must not be thought that time has passed him by without laying an industrious coat of paint over his features. The stowaway of to-day is vastly different to the stowaway of yesterday. At the mention of a stowaway there rises to one's mind's eye the vision of a frightened, white-faced little lad being hauled on deck, with one ear grasped by an infuriated mate. (This, at all events is the picture that adorned the cover of a beloved song of nursery days, entitled The Little Hero.) However it may be, the fact remains that a stowaway is neither necessarily little nor a hero. Frequently he finds his courage desert him when the box up until the following day. Would the captain give her permission to have the trunk brought up immediately?

The captain was polite but firm. The woman should have her box up the following afternoon, but not before. The woman coaxed: the captain was adamant. The woman raged: the captain was mute. Finally the woman knelt on the deck, and, bursting into tears, confessed that her husband was hidden in the box.

This put a different complexion on the matter, and orders were instantly given for the hatches to be taken off. The dutiful wife pointed out the box she desired and it was duly hauled up bearing a conspicuous label, this side up with care. By this time the remainder of the passengers were gathered round to see the excitement and, as the box unlocked the husband suddenly appeared, and made a low bow to the spectators. His next performance was less creditable, for he turned on his wife with the most fierce imprecations, abusing her for not having gone to the captain sooner. She replied with great show of reason that she had purposely postponed going to the captain until they were too far out for him to put the ship back and hand the runaway to justice. Craft, thy name is Woman.

I had reserved to the last the stowaway in whose career I take the deepest interest. He is to other stowaways what Raffles and Arsene Lupin are to Bill Sikes—in other words, he is an artist.

It seems an absurdity to describe as a stowaway one who comes on board in the full glare of daylight with the openly avowed intention of meeting a friend. Unfortunately the friend has a mysterious habit of never travelling on any ship the stowaways meet. Our friend expresses his disappointment, adding that since he is on board he will take the opportunity of looking over the ship. Strange to say, so deep is his interest that he fails to hear the warning bells, nor does the stentorian cry, "Any more for the shore," reach his ears. When he finally appears on deck, it is to find the land out of sight, and the ship going at full speed.

He reports himself to the captain, and enlists the sympathy of his fellow passengers by resolutely making the best of his foolish mistake, until they are moved to lend him clothes and all necessaries. During his short stay on board he makes himself so generally agreeable that a subscription is usually raised on his behalf, and when he leaves the ship at the next port, it is to the tune of "For he's a jolly good fellow." He lies in wait for the next ship travelling in his direction, when he enacts the same comedy, and thus by slow degrees reaches his destination.

With all my heart I wish him good luck, and may he live long to be an example and an honor to those peniless pilgrims or ticketless travellers—the stowaways!

the petitions in her favor. Even on the Stock Exchange itself people hustled one another to sign the appeal for mercy, and in less than a week 500,000 men and women were pleading on her behalf. The Home Secretary anticipated the presentation of the petition by commuting the sentence, but later on the monster petition was carted into his office urging him to a mitigation of the sentence of penal servitude for life.

LIEUTENANT WARK'S CASE.

Liverpool was the centre of another great agitation for mercy in 1898, when the people of Lancashire were aroused respecting the fate of a young lieutenant in the Royal Artillery, Lieutenant Wark, who had been condemned to death by Mr. Justice Darling at the preceding assizes. Wark was accused of the murder of a young woman. Even though guilty, there were many circumstances that appeared to make his offence one for merciful consideration. The jury had themselves strongly recommended him to mercy, and the public found their hearts in accord with their finding. A manly, but at the same time touching, speech made by the prisoner after the verdict had a vast effect. No fewer than 54,000 persons signed the petitions in his behalf, and the sentence was later on commuted to one of merely three years' penal servitude.

JESSIE McLACHLAN.

From morning till night people flocked to the places in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and in all the large towns in Scotland and the North of England where petitions were lying in favor of the young woman who had been pronounced guilty of the murder of Jessie Macpherson, the housekeeper who had been discovered mysteriously murdered in a house in Sandyford Place, Glasgow. The jury had found her guilty, and the judge expressed his entire concurrence in the verdict, but the public regarded the case as one of mystery. "McLachlan shall not die" was the cry of thousands. Crowds flocked to the places where the petitions in her behalf were lying, and in the end the sentence was commuted to one of life-long imprisonment.

THE GREAT PENGEE MYSTERY.

A huge sensation was created by the result of the Penge murder case, when three persons named Staunton—two brothers and the wife of one of them—and a young girl were charged with the murder of the wife of the younger brother by starving her to death. The case was the first murder trial over which Mr. Justice Hawkins presided, and the prisoners were defended by Sir Edward Clarke.

But whether the death of the unfortunate woman was designed or merely the result of callous and brutal indifference was a hard question, and people gave a gasp of surprise when the trial resulted in the batch of four persons being found guilty of wilful murder and sentenced to death! A thrill of horror passed through the country. Agitation in favor of the prisoners commenced on all sides. Over 80,000 persons attached their signatures to the petitions against the death sentence being carried out. So absurd were the verdict and sentence recognized to be with regard to the girl accused with the Stauntons that the Home Secretary hurriedly granted her an ab-would probably fetch $10,000 apiece. All the wonderful wealth of gold and silver in this vault is placed on tray-tables; each table is fitted with four trays, one over the other, and as the articles accumulate more trays are added to the tables. In Queen Victoria's reign the tables contained only two trays. Every single article in the vault is catalogued, and the whole collection is checked and counted over once a year under the supervision of the Keeper of the Privy Purse.

The pictures and statuary in the vaults are the least valuable of their contents. Queen Victoria purchased and accepted as gifts a great many pictures and statues from a number of modern artists, chiefly Germans, whose work is not of much value, and these, when the late King came to the throne, were removed from the apartments and halls in the Royal palaces and placed in the vaults, and replaced by other objects of art of much greater value which were then in the vaults.

Much of the furniture and armor in the vaults is, however, of immense value. A set of old oak chairs and two long tables which are of the eleventh century would fetch thousands of dollars if sold. These chairs are so massive that an ordinary man could not raise one completely from the ground.

Each vault is fitted with three steel doors. The keys of these doors are kept by the Keeper of the Privy Purse, and the vaults are only opened in his presence or that of some responsible official of the Royal Household.

UNCLE HIRAM TO HIS NEPHEW

On the One Priceless Treasure Which all Men Share Alike.

"Stevey, my boy," said Uncle Hiram, "one man may have more talent than another or more courage or more money, but there is one thing that no man on earth can have any more of than you have, and that is time."

"Did you ever stop to think of that? Or maybe you haven't come to it yet, that of the most precious thing of all, the same being, I repeat, time, nobody, no matter who he is, can have any more than you have. There can't be any favoritism or special privilege or gouging or monopoly in time. You get what's coming to you anyway, and no man on earth can take it away from you."

"And isn't this something to be cheerful over? Why, Stevey, it's the grandest thing going to think that of the most valuable thing of all we've got as much as the man that rides by us in a $10,000 automobile. But, and now I'm getting down to the sermon, Stevey, this most precious thing of all is the thing of which we are most wasteful."

"We get our full share of it sure, but we waste it ourselves shockingly."

"Don't waste time, Stevey, please don't. As you feel now you've got a million years ahead of you, more or less, plenty of time; but time is one of those things that once lost can never be recovered. Don't waste a minute of it. When you play, play; sink the shop; forget it utterly; but when you work utilize all your time. Don't dandle it away."

grasped by an infuriated mate. (This, at all events is the picture that adorned the cover of a beloved song of nursery days, entitled The Little Hero.) However it may be, the fact remains that a stowaway is neither necessarily little nor a hero. Frequently he finds his courage desert him when the vessel puts to sea in a gale, and he emerges from his hiding place to entreat the skipper to put him ashore. His behavior, you will notice, compares ill with that of Lord Ullin's daughter.

"I'll face the raging of the storm, But not angry father," cried that heroic damsel.

I once had the good fortune to sail in a liner commanded by a captain whose thrilling tales of stowaways filled the evenings with delight. He is quite accustomed to stowaways who complain of the food! And he once had on board a stowaway who threatened to write to the company on the subject, comparing the food unfavorably with that of other lines in which he had stowed away. Now, to stowaway is a punishable offence, and it would certainly have shown a nicer spirit had he overlooked the flaws in the cooking, seeing that the captain, on his part, had overlooked a little irregularity concerning the purchase of a ticket. But we live in an ungrateful world, and it would be unfair to look to stowaways for a quality noticeably absent in the possessors of state cabins and saloon tickets.

Perhaps it is its rarity that makes gratitude all the more precious when found, and I venture to think the following story of a grateful stowaway is not without special interest.

Six hours after the good ship had left port the quartermaster reported to the captain that a woman stowaway had been found on board. The captain, being a chivalrous gentleman, and not wishing to be hard on the poor woman, sent a polite message to the effect that if she disembarked quietly at the next port he would not be looking. Two days later, in the early morning, the vessel moored alongside the wharf, and the captain pacing up and down the deck, saw a draggle-tailed, disheveled figure clambering down the side. On reaching dry land the unhappy woman looked cautiously about her, and, catching sight of the captain, blew him three fervent kisses before disappearing into the greyness of the dawn.

I should like to write down another story which has a woman as the chief character. To begin, then, I must explain that compulsory military service is in force in the Argentine, and when the inhabitants wish to evade the law they sometimes attempt to stow away, well knowing that all ships are watched to prevent this practice. In this particular case the ship had left Buenos Ayres two hours when a distressed woman forced her way up to the captain's bridge. What arguments, what blandishments, or what force she had used to reach that sacred spot I cannot say, but the captain was more than a little astonished at the intrusion of a petticoat. The woman wasted no time in beginning her explanations; the matter was quite simple and could be arranged instantly with the captain's help. She had, it appeared, naked a frock she was particularly anxious to wear that night in a trunk in the hold, and the baggage officer had refused to allow her to have her

There are many kinds of queer houses in the world, but for difficulty of ingress and egress the huts of some Siberian fur hunters, Koryaks by name, take the palm.

From a distance these huoses have the appearance of huge funnels rising out of a snowbank. The crater-like top of the house, besides forming a roof, is used as a general storage place for food and all sorts of articles. This slopes downward to an aperture in the centre, which serves as a smoke hole, ventilator, and passageway below.

A number of logs arranged in a circle support the rickety framework of the roof, the lower end of which rests on a secondary pile of timbers forming the walls of the living quarters. For nearly nine months the whole house is covered up to the projecting roof with tons of snow, chinked in with frozen earth and debris, the inmates being about ten feet below the surface.

The most peculiar feature of the house, according to Fur News, is the means of entrance. This is accomplished by scaling a narrow split log, having holes cut in for the feet and hands which extends down from the roof at an angle of almost 90 degrees. Getting inside is a feat which none but the experienced native can accomplish with comfort.

The interior is reached by descending another perpendicular tree log stairway, the holes being covered with a slippery coating of grease and soot. A misplaced step of any visiting white fur trader or agent would result in his landing in a pot of blubber always kept boiling at the base.

The whole enclosure has a ground floor, and is barren of anything in the shape of furniture. A large vessel for cooking seal and blubber and a kettle used for melting snow are the chief household utensils. The diet is limited almost exclusively to raw and half-cooked seal and whale flesh, with Russian brick tea and American tobacco as an extra luxury.

Before entering one of these Arctic households it is customary for the white visitor or trader to send word ahead prior to his arrival. On reaching the house he will usually find assembled on the roof awaiting him the host and all his family, including dogs. Dogs play an important part in their primitive religion, and are thought to be a potent agency for keeping away evil spirits and bringing good luck in the hunting of fur animals. For this reason the stuffed form of a dog is always kept dangling from the rooftop of the houses.

COMBINED FOODS GOOD.

There are some good foods which alone would not support life and some are better in proper combination than alone. Milk for instance, is made more digestible by mixture with malted cereal and oil hastens the passage of fruit from the stomach and inhibits the secretion of gastric fluid, which is not needed for sugary fruits, which digest in the intestines.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN RESERVE

THE FUTURE SUPPLY OF TIMBER AND WATER POWER.

Great Areas of Timber Destroyed by Fire During Last Few Years, Surveyors Reported.

The setting aside of the Rocky Mountain forest reserve has been one of the most important advances yet made in the industrial history of Canada's Central West. Not only is it important for the preservation of the forests along the slope with a view to the future supply of timber, but the preservation of these forests and their proper management means much for the preservation of the water-powers and the maintenance of that steady and permanent water-flow which means so much for their value. Moreover, the regulation of the water of these streams, so as to provide a steady flow throughout the year and not to have a torrential flow in spring and (what is if even more importance) the drying up (complete or partial) of the streams in summer, is of the utmost importance to the farms of the prairie provinces. Were the rivers to run short, the resulting lack of moisture in the soil would seriously interfere with the quantity of grain and other produce reaped from the fertile prairie.

ONLY FOREST LAND.

The general principle governing the fixing of the boundary of the reserve was that only forest land should be included in the reserve, all land fit for farming (unless in area so small that it was not worth while to make the exception) being excluded from the reserve. The altitude, or height of the country above sea-level, was one of the chief considerations in fixing the line.

It was found that the boundary fixed by the Order in Council by which the reserve was set apart was, to a considerable extent, unsuitable. It included, in the words of one of the writers, "only alpine country, a large portion of which is above the tree limit and the remainder unsuitable as regards timber supply for years to come. Large portions of it have been burned over, leaving bare, eroded hillsides which were formerly covered by a thin soil and coniferous wood growth. Much country east of the line has a very thin soil and is at a very high altitude and so is unfit for agricultural settlement." Many valleys, however, were found which will be quite suitable for grazing.

Fires have created terrible havoc with the forests of the region. In the part from Calgary north it was estimated that eighty per cent. of the territory covered has been burned over within the past fifty years, and that even within the last twenty-five years forty-eight per cent. of the entire area has been devastated. At least sixty per cent. of the area from Calgary southward has been fire-swept.

DUST WHIRL AND THE SPOUT

WATER NOT ALWAYS IN WATER SPOUTS.

Sailors Used to Fear Them—Now Vessels Have Gone Through Them.

In the waterspout the mediaeval mariner saw a malevolent living monster—a sea dragon. There were various means of combating them. Once all sailors carried black handled knives, which the monster was believed to hold in special abhorrence, say Scientific American.

When a spout made its appearance these knives were produced and pointed in its direction, waved in the air so as to make the sign of the cross, or, according to the recommendation of certain contemporary authorities, driven several times into the side of the ship. Certain passages from the gospel of St. John were recited as charms against waterspouts.

A loud noise of any kind was also believed to be efficacious against them—shouts, the clash of swords, the beating of drums and gongs, etc. The custom of firing cannon against waterspouts dates back at least as far as the sixteenth century. The original idea appears to have been to frighten them away by the noise of the report; but in later times it was believed that the watery column could be cut in twain by the cannon ball and the spout thus dissipated. It would be interesting to know whether the cannoning of waterspouts is still sometimes practiced. It was certainly common much less than a century ago. It is hardly necessary to say that it is entirely futile.

Dust whirls occur only when the surface of the ground is excessively heated, and during their brief existence they are fed by the inflow of the lower air. The sharp contrasts of temperature that produce them are characteristic of a land surface; yet it is over the latter that spouts are most frequent. Here, then, is one point of difference between the dust whirl and the spout.

Another is the fact that no surface inflow of the air is observed about a spout except immediately within a few hundred feet of a vessel when the latter is absolutely becalmed. Both of these circumstances prove the inaccuracy of the common statement that spouts are due to an unstable condition of overheated air at the earth's surface.

Both theory and observation indicate that the vortex of a spout originates at a considerable altitude above the earth, viz., at the level of the middle or lower clouds—and is thence propagated downward. The explanation of its origin margin of a large cyclone, the zone in which spouts originate being identical with that in which squalls are also most common.

Frequently it fails to reach the earth's surface. Incomplete water spouts are often observed dangling from the clouds, with no agitation from the water beneath such as would indicate that the vortex extended to the lowest stream of the air.

Waterspouts are common within the tropics, especially in the equatorial region of calms and baffling winds known as the "doldrums."

per cent of the entire area has been devastated. At least sixty per cent. of the area from Calgary southward has been fire-swept.

LARGE PINE PLENTIFUL.

The nature of the timber found on the slope has been directly determined by this repeated firing. The abundance of lodgepole pine (a species nearly related to the jack pine so often found on old burns in the East) is the most abundant timber, and much poplar (of two or three species) is found. These trees are the first to spring upon burned-over land and by their vigorous growth get far ahead of the slower-growing spruce and red fir. In the northern part of the region reported on about seventy-five per cent. of the area is covered with lodgepole pine in pure stand, that is, without the mixture of any other tree.

In the southern part it was found that the lodgepole pine required thirty years to attain a diameter of five inches and sixty years to reach the diameter of nine inches. The spruce (Engelmann) and red (or Douglas) fir took, respectively, ninety and one hundred and ten years to reach the diameter of twelve inches.

Through all the territory reported on game was plentiful. Special mention is made of the bull, cut-throat and grey-trout, among the fish, and, among the game birds and animals, in their respective districts, duck, grouse and prairie chickens, deer, moose, elk and sheep and many kinds of fur-bearing animals.

Among the mineral resources of the area are the coal-beds, oil-fields (in the south) and quarries of building stone.

SIGNS OF EYE STRAIN.

Symptoms by Which Abuse of Sight Can Be Detected.

Chief among the symptoms of eye strain are watering of the eye, a gluing together of the eyelids on awakening in the morning, headache, the position and character of which vary with each individual. It may be neuralgic or it may be deeply seated, as was the case with Wagner, the musician, who was complaining constantly of "the nerves of his eyes."

The headache is often replaced by an inflammation of the eyelids, especially in young and healthy persons who also have a little conjunctivitis with a feeling of tension or fulness in the eyes which may become real pain of a dull aching character, the eyeballs being very tender on pressure.

Sometimes there are vertigo and sickness, with dyspepsia, palpitation, and even difficulty in breathing. Sleeplessness is a very frequent symptom, due in part to the excessive flow of blood to the brain and in part to the low tone of the whole nervous system.

The symptoms of eye strain appear sooner in those who lead a confined and sedentary life, who follow occupations which need a constant use of the eyes in bad or unsuitable light, and in those who are debilitated from any cause. The symptoms appear later in those of coarser fibre, who pass much of their time in the open air or who follow occupations which do not need a prolonged use of the eyes for close work.

A COSTLY MANGO TREE.

Cause of Litigation. Many Deaths and a Twenty Year Feud.

A certain mango tree, it appears, in growing up would not observe the boundary line between two Bengal estates and distributed its foliage and fruit impartially over both. As a consequence the owners of the estates have spent about 50,000 rupees in litigation, killed a dozen people and fought the bitterest armed fights, says the Calcutta Englishman.

During the bearing season the tree was productive of many mangoes. The first quarrel seems to have started among the women folks of the two families, who insisted that the mangoes belonged to one, then the other. They even resorted to picking the mangoes at night until one party happened to catch the other poaching. A fight followed in which, it is said, two were killed.

After this quiet reigned for some time, when the two principles met one day in a neighboring village and participated in a free for all fight over the innocent tree. They were separated in a bloody condition and were fined by the police. Then followed a long series of feuds and battles covering a period of many years, during which the tree yielded its luscious fruit to the one who happened to be cunning enough to pick it first. Finally both sides established armed guards around the tree and kept watch on each other night and day.

This went on with occasional fights for several years. It was a case of one trying to wear the other one out. Thousands of rupees were paid out for these special parties and fines, for burials of victims, court expenses and ammunition. It was not until just recently that a prominent business man of Calcutta was able to settle the dispute. He asked the two land owners to jointly deed the tree to him in return for many favors he had rendered both of them. This was finally done and he has caused a large cement circular wall to be erected about the tree, to which he has acquired full title and possession.

The quarrel has not only been expensive and fatal, but has kept a community in a constant state of hostility for many years. Any one travelling in Eastern Bengal can easily hear the story and visit the scene of the feud if sufficiently interested in the case. The gentleman whose strategy saved the situation desires that his name should remain unknown.

ON THE FENCE.

requently rains to reach the earth's surface. Incomplete water spouts are often observed dangling from the clouds, with no agitation from the water beneath such as would indicate that the vortex extended to the lowest stream of the air.

Waterspouts are common within the tropics, especially in the equatorial region of calms and baffling winds known as the "doldrums." The East Indies, the Guinea coast, the Red Sea and the Mediterranean are some of their favorite haunts.

It is hardly necessary to state that a waterspout does not consist of water in the ordinary sense of the term. A vortex in the air, formed as described above, is gradually pushed downward. If it reaches the surface of the ocean the latter will be violently disturbed; the water will be dashed upward in the form of waves and spray to a height of many feet, forming the characteristic broad base of the spout.

When a waterspout suddenly breaks, owing to a cessation of its vertical motion, its moisture may be discharged downward in the form of a torrential rain. This has sometimes happened over a ship, and the water was observed to be fresh, not salt, proving that no considerable part of it was drawn directly from the ocean.

It mariners were once the prey to a superstitious dread of waterspouts, on the other hand, the sailor of to-day is perhaps inclined to go to the other extreme. Sea captains have been quoted as saying that they would not be afraid to run their vessels into any waterspouts they have seen. There are, however, several cases on record in which vessels have come off much the worse for involuntary encounters with waterspouts.

In 1895 the German bark Ceylon, Capt. Niemann, bound from Antwerp to Philadelphia, met a waterspout.

Most of her canvas was furled at the time, as she had recently encountered a thunder squall and hence it was not possible to sail out of the way of the spout when it was seen rapidly approaching. The spout struck the vessel on the port side and keeled her over until the starboard yardarms nearly touched the water. At the same time she was swung around from north-northwest to south-southeast and then thrown over to port on her beam ends with such violence that her mainmast and mizzenmast went by the board.

"I'd like to rise at four o'clock and do a hundred chores, saw wood and feed the hogs and lock the stable doors, and herd the hens and watch the bees and take the mule to drink, and teach the turkeys how to swim so that they wouldn't sink, and milk about a hundred cows and bring the wood to burn, and stand out in the sun all day and churn and churn, and wear my brother's cast-off clothes, and walk four miles to school, and get a licking every day for breaking some old rule, and then get home again at night and do the chores some more, and milk the cows and feed the hogs and curdy mules galore, and then crawl wearily upstairs to seek my little bed, and hear dad say: That worthless boy! He isn't worth his bread."

"I'd like to be a boy again—a boy has so much fun. His life is just a round of mirth from rise to set of sun. I guess there's nothing pleasanter than closing stable doors and herding hens and chasing bees and doing evening chores."

MIKADO QUIET IN DRESS.

In Raiment as in Food, Ruler's Taste is Simple.

In raiment, as in food, the Mikado's taste is simple to the verge of severity. At public functions he appears in his uniform of commander-in-chief of the army. In the privacy of private life he wears a frock coat. No imported goods are used in the making of his garments. It is his wish that he should be clothed with the products of the industry of his own people.

In striking contrast to the flaming neckties and astounding checks and remarkable waistcoats seen so often in European cities on Japanese gentlemen travelling abroad, the Emperor dresses invariably in plain black. In the evening he wears the native costume, made of khaki silk of pure white.

The articles of clothing which come in touch with the august person of Japan's Emperor are never worn twice by him. Such garments are handed over to the officers of the palace and to different members of the Royal family.

EDITORIAL COMMENTS.

The better the election results please Bourassa, the worse they should please Canada.

The annexation and loyalty cry certainly worked to perfection in Lennox and Addington, judging from Paul's majority.

The usual bunch of wise ones to remark "I knew it," have come into existence since election day, but there were very few of them in sight the day before election.

The Liberal party was compelled to take the count on election day, but it is not down and out by any means as will be evidenced before another election day rolls along.

The Grits will certainly find a seat for Hon. Geo. P. Graham, as men of his ability are not found every day, and his election would also prove of considerable strength to the opposition.

The defeat of the Laurier Government at Ottawa might work towards the defeat of the Ontario Government, as it is not considered good policy to give everything into the hands of any one party.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, although down under a senseless stampede, will rise again under the influence of common sense. No man in the British Dominion stands so high, or has a firmer grip on the hearts of the British people than our honored leader, Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

It is a significant fact that the day following the elections cheese dropped a cent a pound, hogs dropped from $6.90 to $6.40, and canned goods of all kinds took a jump of 20c a dozen all round. Who says the markets were not inflated to make them appear better than our neighbors?

The Mail is quite sure that the West would have gone Conservative too, if it had had another week to think over the merits of reciprocity. The Mail is like the man who has been "cleaned out" at the races. He is always quite sure that if he had had another hundred dollars his luck would have turned.

SIR WILFRID WILL LEAD OPPOSITION.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier will remain at the head of the Liberal party, and lead the Opposition when the new Parliament meets, some six weeks hence. He was at his office early on Saturday morning, looking and feeling physically as fit as ever. He shows his greatness as much in defeat as in victory, serene in the confidence that Thursday's result brings with it no disgrace, and that the principles for which he and his party have stood must ultimately triumph. To his newspaper friends who called on him he smilingly declared that he was still ready "to stay with the boys" and lead the Liberal forces when the new Parliament meets. Any comments on the verdict of Thursday he will reserve for a public statement later.

THE RACE QUESTION.

Not by way of vain regret, but merely as an attempt at analyzing the situation, it may be remarked that the Bourassa movement—the Nationalist movement—injured Sir Wilfrid Laurier in two ways. The more obvious injury was the loss of several constituencies in Quebec. The less obvious injury was that the excesses of the Nationalists had a tendency to prejudice all Ontario against Quebec and French-Canadians. We on the Liberal side pointed out that the Nationalists were not the friends but the enemies of Laurier, and that Laurier was being struck at in Quebec just because he was not an extremist or a separatist, but an all-round Canadian and Britisher. But we seem to have been up against a mental process of this kind: "The Nationalists are French-Canadians. Laurier is a French-Canadian. The quickest and surest way to strike at French-Canadian pretensions is to strike at Laurier, the most distinguished of the race; to take the Premiership away from a French-Canadian and give it to a man with an English name."

This danger has overhung Sir Wilfrid Laurier throughout his whole career as Premier. The moment his Cabinet was formed it was denounced as a French-Canadian Cabinet. The South African war gave Bourassa his start as a leader of anti-Imperial sentiment in Quebec. Laurier had to meet his opposition in Quebec, while at the same time Ontario coupled Laurier and Bourassa together, and the Liberal party lost many Ontario seats in 1900 from this cause. Laurier suffered in Ontario from the very excesses which in Quebec he was trying to check. It is very difficult for a French-Canadian to be Prime Minister of Canada. Laurier's genius for unification made it possible for fifteen years. Bourassa and his friends have done much to make it impossible.

The Premiership now reverts to a man of the English race. He will have his difficulties, as Sir John A. Macdonald had, in reconciling Quebec sentiment with the sentiment of the other Provinces. He will have to choose his Quebec sub-leaders. He will have to frame some kind of naval policy. But it is quite likely that because of his race he will have a somewhat easier lot than his predecessor. His race and origin will not be continually talked of and racial motives ascribed to his actions.—Toronto Star.

In view of the speculation as to the date on which the Ministry will resign, it is interesting to recall the dates given in history for previous resignations, following the defeat of a Government on an appeal to the electors.

Since Confederation there have been only four changes of Government: In 1873, in 1878, in 1896, and in 1911. The procedure in each case was as follows:

In 1873, owing to the evidence at the inquiry into the "Pacific Scandal," Sir John Macdonald, who had met Parliament on October 23rd, resigned office on November 5th, and on November 7th, Alexander Mackenzie succeeded in forming a Ministry. Parliament was prorogued same day, and was dissolved on January 2nd following, and on January 22nd the general elections took place, with the result that the Liberal Government had a majority of 60.

The Mackenzie Ministry dissolved Parliament on August 17th, 1878, and the general elections took place on September 22nd, placing the Government in a minority of 68. The mini-

IN A CITY OF SWEETS

A CHARMING STUDY OF LIFE AMONG THE BEES.

The Worker Arriving Home With Her Burden of Flower Sugar Finds the Hive In an Uproar—The Rival Queens and Their Lash For the Rulership of the Colony—The Workers Intervene.

She came booming along through the hot, scented air, with an absurd amount of bustle that contrasted strangely with the languor that lay over all things. She was in a hurry—she always was—and dropped to the buttercup—after passing several blue and brown flowers for no other reason than that their color was unattractive to her—with a whirr that scattered the darting flies, and knocked a climbing ant head-over-heels. She was a bee, a worker bee of true British stock.

She had been told off to gather bee-bread, which is pollen of flowers and honey mixed in proportion known only to its makers. With incredible speed, that almost suggested machinery, she dusted the pollen of the buttercup off with her hairy forelegs, and packing it in balls of fractionally equal weight, tucked these on the stiff, curved hairs of her hind legs provided for that purpose.

Then she dropped from her flower, and her load bore her almost to the ground before the little whirling wings could get up speed sufficient to lift the weight and clear the tops of the herbage.

As she hummed along homewards, she picked up her landmarks just like a ship coming in from the sea. It was necessary first to rise high, pick up the big poplar, dropping thence to get an age-old hawthorn, standing in her own cast-off drapery of blossom, in line with the cherry tree. Thence all was clear to the corner, where, rank upon rank, were the beehives. No. 3 hive was hers, and events of great moment were taking place at No. 3 hive, it seemed. As a matter of fact, a queen had been born, or rather allowed to come out before her time, the result of a mis-calculation on the part of those worker-bees in charge of the royal nurseries. The outcome was chaos, for the old queen had heard the news and she was looking for the usurper all up and down the royal galleries, with a drawn sting and imperial anger.

Thousands of bees hung in the air above No. 3 hive as our bee dropped to the crowded alighting-platform, and their hum could be heard afar off. The press in the gateway was awful, and the keepers of the gate, who are supposed to know every bee in the hive, were nearly driven frantic.

Our bee pushed her way through hundreds of lounging, fat, jolly drones, male-bees, discussing the news in groups, or sparring in corners. She hurried up the network of passages and galleries leading to the bee-bread cells, was received by the bees in charge of the same, shown an empty cell, deposited her load therein with an almost lightning quick brush of her furry fore-legs, and turned to hurry off as usual for more. There, however, she stayed, her passage barred by a press of attendants and maid-in-waiting, and a big, swollen form that filled the corridor.

The queen!

The buzz that announced the royal presence was almost instantly answered by another, and louder, buzz of excitement further up the corridor, where other attendants were vainly trying to hustle away another big, but more graceful and less swollen, form. It was the young queen. Her guards had vainly tried, to hide her among the bee-bread cells.

Followed a scream of rage from the old queen, a rush, a scattering of attendants, and the young queen

INDUSTRIAL OPPORTUNITIES IN MARITIME PROVINCES.

The Maritime Provinces as a promising field for those who desire to establish new industries, or to profitably invest capital in the exploitation and development of natural resources, is the theme of an interesting booklet just issued by the Intercolonial Railway. The obvious advantages of many parts of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are ably presented in detail, together with many cheerful facts that ought to impress those who have capital ready to invest in a new field that is certainly rich in opportunity. It is commendable that while the eyes of the world are upon Canada, and thousands of new settlers are pouring into the West from many countries, an honest effort is being made to point out the advantages that exist in the east. The booklet will be mailed free to those who write the Industrial Department, Intercolonial Railway, Moncton, N. B.

Followed a scream of rage from the old queen, a rush, a scattering of attendants, and the two queens were face to face, neither willing to give way. The royal battle lasted fourteen seconds, and twice our bee was high crushed to death in the heat of it. Then, quite suddenly, it ceased, and our bee beheld each queen holding the other, it were, by the throat; each queen with deadly sting drawn back ready to strike, and—forebearing. It was never struck, that fatal thrust. Nothing; no fear of life or death; no agony for hunger; no pride or love of power; no passion of hate could force them to break the one immutable law of beeland, which provides that the hive shall not be left queenless. So, since in that position they would have slain each other, they forebore for the hive's sake, and an hour later the old queen abdicated and "swarmed," taking her old retainers with her.

Young Diplomatist.

Taddy, aged four, often called on his nearest neighbor, Mrs. Brown, who petted him a good deal and usually gave him a couple of her nice cookies, and if she happened to forget to pass them out he sometimes reminded her of it.

His father learned of this and chided him for begging and told him he must not do so any more. A day or two later Taddy came home with cookie crumbs in evidence.

"Have you been begging cookies from Mrs. Brown again?" asked his father rather sternly.

"No," said Taddy. "I didn't beg for any. I just said, 'This house smells as if it was full of cookies, but what's that to me?'"

Not a Scot.

From some unexplained cause the engine attached to a Scottish express once broke down near Y. A worthy quickly put his head out of the window and inquired:

"What on earth's wrang, gaird?"

The guard was cross, for no records could be broken that journey, and testily he replied:

"Well, Scottie, the driver's a countryman of yours, and the beggar has used all the hot water in the boiler to mix grog with."

"Na, na, gaird, the chief's nae a Scot," came the retort, "or he widna trouble muckle about the water."

PEARLS OF LITERATURE.

Which Came Within One of Remaining Forever in Obscurity.

The history of literature is full of narrow escapes and there is no doubt but what many an unknown masterpiece lies hidden in the wreck of the past. Every now and then in these adventurous times a diver comes up to the surface with a pearl—a single sample of the treasures that may be buried below. It is but a quarter century since William Blake's poetry was restored to literature. Bret Harte's Heathen Chinee, which set two continents laughing, was the only thing in the world which produced a sudden demand for his former works, fully as good, but up to then buried in obscurity.

Blackmore's Lorna Doone and Wallace's Ben Hur both ran through curiously similar experiences. Both were neglected on their first appearance. For a year or so both dragged along a slow sale. Then suddenly the public awoke to the merits of one and the other. The sales bounded upward, and from that time to the present they continue to roll on in a steady stream. The demand to-day is almost as certain as the demand for Shakespeare or the Bible.

Everybody knows the story of the first edition of FitzGerald's Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam. He brought out a few hundred copies at a shilling apiece, and when they wouldn't sell at that price he reduced them to a penny. Even at that they failed to attract purchasers. Twenty years passed away, and then Swinburne one day rescued a copy from the scrap heap. He fell in love with the book; he read it to George Meredith and to Dante Gabriel Rossetti. They caught his enthusiasm, and shouted the praises of the Rubaiyat from the housetops. The fame of FitzGerald was established forever, the fame of Omar was revived and redoubled.

There are other works for which the world must sigh in vain. We know that the manuscript of Kipling's Recessional was rescued by his wife from a waste basket into which the author had cast it in despair. Probably there is no other of Kipling's poems which the world could so little afford to lose.

Tennyson's Crossing the Bar was rescued from a similar fate by a nurse who attended him in the sickness which had suggested the poem. Now we further know that both Kipling and Tennyson destroyed many manuscripts of their unpublished works. Were they as badly mistaken in these instances as they were in the others?

Baby's Terrible Eczema.

Hands Tied to Prevent Scratching.

Five Doctors Failed to Relieve, But Zam-Buk Worked a Cure.

Mrs. Chas. Levere, of Prescott, North Channel, Ont., tells how Zam-Buk cured her baby. She says:—"My baby's head and face was one complete mass of sores. The itching and irritation were fearful, and the little one's plight was so serious that at one time we feared her ears would be eaten off by the disease.

"We had to keep her hands tied for days to prevent her rubbing and scratching the sores. Doctor after doctor treated her in vain, until we had had five doctors. They all agreed it was a frightful case of eczema, but none of them did any permanent good.

"As a last resource we were advised to try Zam-Buk. The first box did so much good that we felt sure we were at last working in the right direction. We persevered with the treatment until we had used thirteen boxes, and at the end of that time I am glad to say Zam-Buk had effected a complete cure.

For eczema, eruptions, rashes, tetter, itch, ringworm and similar skin diseases, Zam-Buk is without equal. It also cures cuts, burns, scalds, piles, abscesses, chronic sores, blood poisoning, etc. All druggists and stores at 50 cents a box, or post free for price from Zam-Buk Co. Toronto, Canada.

RIDING THE BELLS.

Spectacular Feats of the Daring Ringers of Seville.

The ringing of a bell is not, as a rule, a performance particularly trying to the nerves, but there is one set of bell ringers the members of which must know no fear, for a moment of tremor would in all probability be for them the moment of death. They are the bell ringers of the Giralda, in Seville.

When the city is to make merry on feast days the ringers climb to the belfry, and then by the aid of a rope and steps cut in the wall of the tower each mounts to the bell he is to ring and stands astride the shoulder of the brazen monster. Then he presses the bell with his feet, holding on the cross-piece on which the mass of metal is swung.

Gradually the great bell sways to the muscular movement of the man astride it until it acquires a momentum that swings the hammer, first gently and then with increasing force as the sweep of the bell widens until the air is trembling from the giant blows that strike the massive sides of the monster.

The mere vibration of the atmosphere as the huge bells ring out would be enough to make an unpracticed ringer turn dizzy and fall from his perch. But this is not all, for many bells are ringing in the belfry at the same time in obedience to the movements of their riders, and the din is deafening.

Zam-Buk had effected a complete cure. The mere touching of the ointment was enough to make an unpracticed ringer turn dizzy and fall from his perch. But this is not all, for many bells are ringing in the belfry at the same time in obedience to the movements of their riders, and the din is deafening.

Notwithstanding all this, the riders bend and rise and fall with the action of the bells, now appearing to the observer from below to be in a horizontal position as the bell reaches the limit of its swing and again riding gracefully to an upright position as the monster sways backward with another thundering note.

The most extraordinary part of the daring performance is the sight of a bell ringer calmly swaying the bell while it hangs far out of the belfry over the city, for the outward swing sends the counterpoise with the ringer into space beyond the arch.—Success Magazine.

Scandalous!

Mr. Chamberlain's seventy-fifth birthday recalls a good story of the great statesman which will bear retelling. For many years Mr. Chamberlain's greatest friend has been Mr. Jesse Collings, and this friendship, according to Mr. Austen Chamberlain, once led to an amusing mistake. His father and Mr. Collings had gone for a holiday on the Continent, and their movements were duly reported in the newspapers. One newspaper got the names wrong, however, and some of Mr. Chamberlain's more Puritanical friends were scandalized to hear that he had gone off to the Continent with a certain "Jessie Collins" and no chaperon!

MADE WELL AND STRONG

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Toronto.—I gladly give you my testimonial in favor of your wonderful medicines. Last October I wrote to you for advice as I was completely run down, had bearing down sensation in the lower part of bowels, backache, and pain in the side. I also suffered terribly from gas.

After receiving your directions, I followed them closely and am now entirely free from pain in back and bowels, and am stronger in every way.

I also took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before my baby was born, and I recommend it highly to all pregnant women.—MRS. E. WANDBY, 92 Logan Ave., Toronto, Ont.

Another Woman Cured

Maple Creek, Sask.—I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier, and I am now in perfect health. I was troubled with pains every month. I know other women who suffer as I did and I will gladly recommend your medicine to them. You may publish this if you think it will help others.—MRS. F. E. COOK, Maple Creek, Sask.

If you belong to that countless army of women who suffer from some form of female ills, don't hesitate to try Lydia E. Pinkham Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs.

Newfoundland.

In spite of ease and swiftness of communication we break down over the pronunciation of names that lie outside our front door. There is Newfoundland. Our earliest speculation in American settlers. But you can't pronounce it so as to satisfy everybody. A visitor has protested. The name has three solid syllables. One must win. In English mouths the accent is generally put on the second syllable, for the dogs found their day. That is wrong, quite wrong. But do you know whether you should say "New-fnln" or "Nfnland?"—London Chronicle.

Wasted Effort.

"Sorry, Bill, I can't come to the theater with you tonight. Now, don't look so cross. You ain't cross, really, are yer, Bill?"

"No, I ain't exactly cross, Liz, but still it is a bit aggravating for a chap to find he's washed his face and hands for nothing, ain't it?"—London Telegraph.

MUST CARRY GOOD WATCHES

Railroad Men Are Compelled to Use Accurate Timepieces.

It may be news to many that the watch of the railroad man is as necessary in modern railroading as the air brake. Without accurate time-keeping there would probably be more accidents than if there were no air brakes. The train dispatcher starts a train at a certain time; he halts it at certain stations at certain times; he side tracks it for a period of varying length; the watch of the conductor on the side tracked train must agree with the watch of the conductor on the express to which he had to give way; each station master along the road checks the time of every train that stops or flies past.

In order that there may be agreement among all these railroad men there must obviously be not only timepieces, but accurate timepieces. There must also be some means of inspecting the timepieces to see if they are accurate and if they agree with some standard. The railroad man is therefore compelled to buy not simply an ordinary watch of reasonable value, but a particularly good watch, a timepiece which is adjusted to heat, cold and at least three positions. These three positions are pendant up, as carried in the pocket; dial up and dial down. Such an instrument will not vary more than thirty seconds a week, which is a good deal more accurate than many scientific instruments of precision used in laboratories. Even human proneness to error is considered in this matter of choosing a good railroad watch, for a lever set watch is preferred to the pendant set watch because there is just the chance that the stem of the pendant set may not be pushed back after setting through an oversight.

On one great line about 5,000 watches, worth on an average of $25 apiece (a low average), are used. If we take into consideration the number of watches that are used on other roads throughout the country it is evident that the value must run up into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

In order that the watch may be kept up to a regular standard it must be inspected regularly. There is not only a general time inspector on most railroads, but a staff of local inspectors who are placed along the road at convenient points and to whom the men may resort when they wish to compare their time with the standard time at that place. Once every two weeks the railroad man submits his watch to such an inspector, usually a jeweler or watchmaker by profession.

The inspector gives his expert opinion on the condition of the timepiece. If it needs cleaning he says so and does it; if it is fast or slow he regulates it, and not until it is running with sufficient accuracy is it allowed to escape from his care. A watch's record is kept as if it were a thief. So far as repairing goes, the railroad man is under no compulsion. He need not hand over his watch to any particular watchmaker or inspector for repair, but he can give it to any watchmaker in whom he has confidence. It must, however, be submitted to the inspector before it can be used in actual service.

That no favoritism is shown in the matter of watches is evident in the fact that no less than eight different manufacturers supply railroad watches.—Scientific American.

Making the Chances Even.
 In days when tavern brawls in England were frequent and swords were out on the slightest provocation common fairness demanded that the blades of chance combatants should be of equal length. In a sudden affray there would be no thought of measuring swords, so the authorities took the matter into their own hands at the gates of the city of London, where every gallant was liable to be challenged, and if the public official found any blade beyond thirty-six inches the smith stood by to snap off the steel to the required length. In Queen Elizabeth's reign this was the common practice.

A Sixtus V. Salad.
 When Pope Sixtus V. was an obscure monk he had a great friend in a certain lawyer who sank steadily into poverty while the monk rose to the papacy. The poor lawyer journeyed to Rome to seek aid from his old friend, the pope, but he fell sick and told his doctor to let the pope know of his sad state. "I will send him a salad," said Sixtus and duly dispatched a basket of lettuce to the invalid. When the lettuce was examined money was found in the hearts; hence the Italian proverb of a man in need of money, "He wants one of Sixtus V.'s salads."

Jam For Breakfast.
 People who like to eat pastry or other irregular dishes for breakfast should be consoled to learn that no less a man than Herbert Spencer ate strawberry jam at his morning meal. He did it to avoid monotony, believing that digestion was best served by keeping the stomach entertained with variety. He is said to have told of a man who went into a decline from a too steady diet of mutton chops.

A Comedy of Errors.

When Baron Haussmann went to Constantinople on a visit to Abdul Aziz, who was then sultan, he had an interview with the grand vizier, who did not know a word of French. At the beginning of the interview the old long Turkish pipes were brought in, and then Baron Haussmann began making a very long speech in French. The grand vizier could not understand a word, but listened most attentively till he noticed that his pipe had gone out and clapped his hand for a servant to come and relight it. Haussmann, thinking he was applauding, rushed toward him with outstretched hand, intending to shake hands and thank him. The grand vizier, seeing his hand put forth, shook it warmly and said "Good-bye," under the impression it was Haussmann's intention to leave, and quitted the room.

A Home Thrust.

Many years ago in a boarding-school for boys the principal was a learned clergyman, a preacher of long sermons and a strict grammarian. One night after ten o'clock taps, when all the boys should have been in bed, he was passing silently through the dormitory when he heard sounds of revelry from a darkened room. He rapped on the door—silence within, then:

"Who's there?"

"It's me—the principal. Open the door."

"Ha, ha, ha-a! You're a liar! If it was the doctor he would say 'It is I.'"

Seeing the force of this argument, the doctor passed on.

HER SKIN SEEMED ON FIRE

Every Other Treatment Failed But "Fruit-a-tives" Cures

GRANDE LIGNE, QUE., Jan. 2nd, 1910.

"My wife was greatly distressed for three years with chronic Eczema on the hands, and the disease was so severe that it almost prevented her from using her hands. The doctor gave her several ointments to use, but none of them did any good. He also advised her to wear rubber gloves and she wore out three pairs without getting any benefit. As a last resort, I persuaded her to try 'Fruit-a-tives', and the effect was marvellous. Not only did 'Fruit-a-tives' entirely cure the Eczema, but the Asthma, which she suffered from, was also completely cured."

We both attribute our present good health to "Fruit-a-tives". N. JOUBERT.

"Fruit-a-tives" will always cure Eczema or Salt Rheum because "Fruit-a-tives" purifies the blood, corrects the Indigestion and Constipation, and tones up the Nervous System.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine in the world made of fruit juices and valuable tonics, and is the greatest of all blood-purifying remedies.

STELLA.

On the 6th of Sept. John Hennerson, one of the oldest and most highly esteemed residents of Amherst Island, passed away at the ripe age of eighty-one years. Sixty-eight years ago, then a boy of fourteen, Mr. Hennerson came to the island with his parents from Ireland. In 1856 he married Miss Agnes Finnegan, daughter of Robert Finnegan, and settled on the well-known farm on the south shore, where he spent the rest of his days. Mrs. Hennerson predeceased him in 1890, leaving four children—David, who died in early manhood, aged twenty-four; Robert, of Wolfe Island; Jape (Mrs. William Montgomery, of the North Shore); Mary (Mrs. Hugh Filsen), on the homestead farm, with whom he resided until his death.

His last illness was brief and his sufferings often severe, but they were borne with Christian resignation and cheered with the assurance of faith.

The funeral which was largely attended, took place on the 8th inst., from the residence of Hugh Filsen, to the old Pentland cemetery. The pallbearers were his three nephews; H. Fleming, W. Brown, D. Finnegan, his son Robert, and his sons-in-law, Hugh Filsen and William Montgomery. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Porter, assisted by Rev. James Cumberland.

Cedron Seed Plant.

In Central America many natives are gathering the seeds of this plant, Cedron Seed, a rare medicine that has valuable curative powers. But few drug stores carry this seed, owing to the high cost of the article.

This country is a large consumer of this costly seed because it enters into the famous catarrh remedy, Peruna, sold the world over.

A Novel Fine.

An Englishwoman in the Rivera stepped on the footboard of a train, intending to enter the carriage, but found the door locked. The train started suddenly and she recognized that she would have to travel on the footboard until the next station was reached. A man who saw her plight crept backward on the footboards, stepping from carriage to carriage with some peril and supported her with his arm until the next station was reached, half an hour later. The woman was fined several francs for "illegally traveling outside the train." The rescuer disappeared without leaving name or address.

Brocken Specters.

Brocken is situated on the highest summit of the Harz mountains, 3,740 feet above the sea. The mountain is frequently veiled in mist and is celebrated for the phenomenon known as the "specter of Brocken," which is nothing more than the shadow of men, houses or other objects thrown upon the eastern horizon by the light of sunset.

He Pleased Her.

"What do you think of your new boarder?" asked the typewriter. "Oh, I think he's such a nice young man," replied the boarding-house lady. "He's a very small eater, isn't he?" "Oh, my, yes; he's really eaten his way into my affection."

THE POWER OF COMPOUND INTEREST.

A man may secure an absolutely sure income of $600 a year for his little 5 year old daughter or granddaughter, from the time she is 55 to the end of her days, if he will pay to the Canadian Government the sum of $964.75. If she should die at any time before reaching the Annuity age the money paid together with 3 per cent compound interest will be refunded to the purchaser, or as he may direct. There are but few parents who, when they understand the matter, will not be anxious to make the investment, if they can spare the money, in order to have the assurance that their daughter, no matter what reverses overtake her after she is 55, would have a comfortable income in her old age—an income that she cannot be deprived of by any person or any process of law.

Full particulars of this excellent scheme may be had on application to the Superintendent of Canadian Government Annuities, Ottawa, to whom letters go free of postage.

More bread and Better bread —And the Reason for it

A STRONG FLOUR can only be made from strong wheat. Manitoba hard wheat is acknowledged the strongest in the world—and that is the kind used for Purity Flour.

But that's not all. Every grain of this wheat contains both high-grade and low-grade properties. In separating the high-grade parts from the low-grade the Western Canada Flour Mills put the hard wheat through a process so exacting that not a single low-grade part has the remotest chance of getting in with the high-grade.

Of course this special process is more expensive to operate but it means a lot to Purity flour users—that's why we use it.

It means that Purity Flour is made entirely of the highest-grade flour parts of the strongest wheat in the world.

It means a high-class, strong flour and therefore yields "more bread and better bread."

Purity may cost a little more than some flours, but results prove it the cheapest and most economical after all.

KEPT HIS MOUTH SHUT.

The Lady Guaranteed Silence, and She Made Good.

Unexpectedly an uptown pastor who encouraged congregational singing gained a new parishioner. Keen though his delight in hearing his people sing, there was one member of his flock whose endeavors he never encouraged. But the man sang without encouragement, much to the discomfiture of pew holders anywhere near him, who claimed that his loud, unmusical voice threw them out of time and tune.

Repeated complaints convinced the minister that somebody would have to assume the responsibility of silencing the ambitious singer. He decided that the man's wife was best fitted for the job. Owing to a difference in religious views husband and wife attended different churches, but the minister knew her, so he called and explained his predicament. She was genuinely surprised.

"Do you mean to say he sings?" she said.

"Tries to," amended the pastor. She thought a minute. "I shall have to come there to church," she said.

"I shall be glad to see you," said the minister. "But what effect will that have on your husband's singing?"

The look she gave him was more significant than words, and they meant a good deal.

"John will never open his mouth when I am around," she said.

And John never has.—New York Times.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

A Chinese prince in this country visited police headquarters in New York and was much interested in the thumb mark records preserved there as a method of identification for criminals.

"We have used thumb marks for several thousand years as seals on mercantile and other papers," the Chinaman told the man in charge of the thumb mark bureau, "but we do not use them in any other way."

"How do you identify your criminals?" asked the thumb mark man.

"Oh, we have a very simple method of identification—we cut off their heads."—Saturday Evening Post.

Innocent of Politics.

It is a mistake to suppose that a knowledge of politics is essential to a statesman's life. Lady Lansdowne is said to be her husband's right hand, because, as the marquis tells his friends, "she knows nothing about politics and does not want to." By all accounts Lord Lansdowne finds this most restful. Lady Lansdowne was born in the dual purple, her father having been that remarkable nobleman known as "Old Splendid." She was one of four sisters who were beauties of their day. Lady Lansdowne and her sister, the Marchioness of Blandford, were married at Westminster Abbey on the same day.

The issues of the recent "labor war" in England are being investigated by a government commission, and the process is a slow one. The recommendations of the commission will be accepted, the government having intimated that, if necessary, the railroads will be "permitted" to increase their rates. What system of arbitration, or trade agreements and conciliation, the commission will favor remains to be seen.

Meantime the sober, second thoughts and comments of the leading British weeklies on the labor war and its lessons are very significant indeed. The trend of the comments is that neither strikes nor lockouts can be tolerated in the field of transportation. If employers and employed cannot get together and settle differences by negotiation, the nation or the "third party," the great public, must step in and impose arbitration somehow. In the words of the independent and progressive Economist of London:

There is a certain analogy between the railway service, the postal service, the police service and the army. The man who enters employment of this kind cannot be allowed to place himself at the disposal of a private club or organization in such a way that he may be compelled (or feel himself bound in honor) to desert his post at the command of an outside executive. His first duty lies to his service, and he must learn to get his grievances redressed by reasonable methods. It should be a condition of the railway service that no employee should be entitled to strike.

These utterances would have been radical and exceptional ten years ago. They are read without surprise to-day. The notion that the government must merely watch the ring, see that the fighting is fair and prevent spectators from interfering is almost universally discredited. The law may not forbid strikes and lockouts; public sentiment does "forbid" them when they are unreasonable, avoidable, wasteful and disastrous. The public depends on moral pressure and moral coercion, but a few ruinous labor wars would cause an irresistible demand for another kind of pressure and coercion. The duty of "reasonableness" must be recognized. Prosperity, progress, stability, credit—everything, in a word, argues for the settlement of serious labor disputes by trade boards or by impartial arbitration. The period of paralyzing and calamitous strife is past.

It is reported that recent excavations in the palace of the wicked King Ahab in Samaria have brought to light tablets inscribed with the correspondence of the king, his wife, Jezebel, and the prophet El-

THE FARM

Useful Hints for the Tiller of the Soil

SCOURS IN CALVES.

Scours in calves or calf cholera in many instances differ from diarrhoea in grown animals, and has special features of its own, taking the form of infectious intestinal catarrh, which is far more serious than the diarrhoea of the full grown animal.

Scours in calves generally appear suddenly. A perfectly healthy calf may be seized all at once, apparently, without any change in food or care.

The symptoms of this infantile diarrhoea usually appear during the first two or three weeks of life.

In many cases scours appear within a few hours after the animal is born, and the calf may die within from 24 hours unless it receives prompt and proper treatment.

It is common for the calf to be afflicted with scours immediately at birth, even before it has had time to suck or take any nourishment whatever.

The faeces of manure is very thin and watery. It has a sour, disagreeable odor and is usually light colored. The evacuations are frequent and expelled with force.

The first indication of scours is the soiled condition of the tail, loss of appetite, sunken eyes, sometimes the saliva flowing from the mouth, no attempt being made to swallow.

They have a staring coat, grow thin, and lose strength rapidly.

Death usually follows in from twelve to twenty-four hours unless prompt measures are taken to check the disease.

If allowed to continue for any length of time the scouring will be accompanied by congestion and ulceration of the intestinal mucous membrane caused by the irritating secretions.

As a result of this disease partial or double blindness is sometimes brought on.

To prevent scours in calves, proper care should be given to the mother while pregnant, that she may be able to give birth to a healthy calf.

As scours is a germ disease, it is important that the calf be free from this disease when born.

Cows afflicted with the disease of abortion convey this disease to their offspring.

It is for this reason that calves so often die of scours before they have taken nourishment.

It is therefore very necessary that the cow be kept free from disease in order to obtain healthy calves.

Calves born, afflicted with the germs of this disease in their system, are in a position to spread the disease to other calves that they may come in contact with in the same herd, or if shipped to other herds. This is another proof of its infectious nature.

To prevent and overcome scours in calves, they should be given medicines that prevent fermentation of feed, to allay irritation and congestion, soothe and heal inflamed mucous membrane, act as an antiseptic, as this is quite necessary when the disease is due to a germ.

The most important factor in the raising of cattle is their care while young. Do not think you are doing the correct thing if you are only managing to keep the life in the calf until it is three months old, and then have it get fat on grass before the winter comes.

If you do this, you will be apt to have a lot of stunted calves with their digestive organs destroyed which will never make strong, healthy cattle and will not be good for either dairy, beef or breeding animals.—Dr. David Roberts.

A MOVABLE CORN CRIB.

A good movable corn crib may be built of barrel staves, that is the walls, the roof of lap siding or any kind of roofing you want.

For the side walls use two lengths of staves and run a pole on the middle to nail the staves on, and run the two rods through the middle of the crib, one through poles and one through plates. The size of the crib is according to how much corn you raise.

The walls must slant out a little toward the top, as this will keep out the rain better. The floor is tight.

This kind of a crib is quite cheap and may be built of small poles nailed close together if no barrel staves are of hand.

Such a crib keeps the corn in good condition. It dries quickly and keeps dry all the year around, which is not possible for corn kept in a tight granary where it molds and spoils at once.

CARE OF CHICKENS.

All the old birds, and young, too, should be examined frequently during the hot months, because then it is that the lice and mites thrive.

If cut bone or chopped meat is fed during the summer, extra precautions must be taken to have it perfectly fresh.

Many birds die from eating bone and meat scraps which have been allowed to lie around exposed to the heat and the flies.

In feeding chickens always remember that they are provided for to produce fresh eggs for human food and, therefore, their own food should be just as pure as that we eat ourselves.

The hot sun will cause young goslings and ducklings as well to topple over and die. Provide shade for them until they are strong on their pegs.

WEIGHT AND HEALTH.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON,
OCTOBER 1.

Lesson 1.—The prophet Ezekiel a watchman, Ezek. 3. Golden Text, Ezek. 2. 17.

Verse 1. And he said unto me—God is speaking. This portion of the heavenly message, having to do with the prophet's inspiration, begins with verse 8 of chapter 2, and extends through verse 3 of the lesson. For the source, distinctness, nature, and compulsion of the prophet's call to his sacred office, and the completeness of his surrender to it, see the introduction above.

Son of man—"Child of man" would be a preferable translation. The phrase is of frequent occurrence in the book, being used over ninety times. It calls attention to the contrast between the lowliness of mankind and the majesty of God.

Eat this roll—This is a forcible way of expressing how thoroughly the prophet must appropriate and assimilate the message given him. He must make it his own before he attempts to speak it to the house of Israel. The roll had appeared before the prophet in a stretched out hand, and he saw it to be the roll of a book. Ordinarily rolls would be written only on one side, but the contents of this one were full, being written without and within (compare Rev. 5. 1). Compare Jeremiah's call (Jer. 1. 7-9).

3. As honey—The roll was filled with lamentations and mourning and woe (Ezek. 2. 10). But since it was from God the prophet found the bitterness turned into sweetness. That is a common experience in life among those consecrated to the will of the Lord. Bunyan represents the Valley of Humiliation as a sweet thing.

4-11.—Strength for his mission to his fellow countrymen. He is warned of the obstinacy of his people, but promised a resoluteness in purpose more steady than their persistency in disobedience.

4. Speak with my words—It is characteristic of Ezekiel, and of Jeremiah, to represent themselves as receiving, not merely the "word" of God, but his very "words."

5. People of a strange speech—This refers to the inarticulateness with which foreigners seem to a stranger to speak. They are "deep of lip" (margin). Their utterance also sounds "heavy" (margin). Compare Isaiah 33. 19 for the first and Exod. 4. 10 for the other expression. Ezekiel was to be spared the difficulty of mastering a foreign tongue. But there were greater difficulties to be met. If he could once make himself clear to the heathen they would be found to be susceptible to the truth, and would hearken to him (6).

7. They will not hearken unto me—This, then, was Ezekiel's task, to try to persuade people who had been guilty of a life-long refusal to be persuaded by God himself. Outwardly, they have a hard forehead; not a muscle in their faces twitches before the condemning truth. Inwardly, they are stiff of heart; there is no yielding of will or feeling.

9. Fear them not—It is not the business of a prophet to measure out his message according to the mitous strife is past.

It is reported that recent excavations in the palace of the wicked King Ahab in Samaria have brought to light tablets inscribed with the correspondence of the king, his wife, Jezebel, and the prophet Elijah. Probably this is sheer fiction, but one wishes it were true. It might give somebody a chance to attempt what no one ever has tried—the whitewashing of Jezebel. We know only what her enemies have told her. They have painted her as a bold, resourceful, revengeful woman, who came to a bad end. Doubtless she was a wicked woman, but even her worst act, the murder of Naboth the Jezreelite, so that Ahab could get possession of the vineyard he coveted, proves her to have been a devoted wife. She was much the stronger character of the two and probably was the real ruler—the hand behind the curtain.

We have a record of the message which Jezebel sent to Elijah after he had slain the priests of Baal. She notified him that it was her intention "to make thy life as the life of one of them by to-morrow about this time." He knew she was no triller, and he arose and fled. He must also have irritated her in other ways, talking to her much as John Knox did to Mary Queen of Scots. Jezebel was a brave woman. She did not flinch when death came thundering at the gate. She painted her face and tied her hair. She met Jehu as a king's daughter should, with threats, not prayers. One really would like to know more about this woman, whose name has become a byword. If she could speak for herself and detail all her trials and tribulations the final conclusion of the historian might be that she was not so black as she had been painted.

Nothing could be more interesting or enlightening than letters exchanged between the queen, who was a devout worshipper of Baal, and the great prophet of Israel, but if there were such letters they probably never will be found. Jezebel will have no opportunity to plead her own case.

A SATIRIC GEM.

This anecdote portraying the biting side of Mark Twain's wit comes from "Little Stories about Mark Twain." The humorist once asked a neighbor if he might borrow a set of his books.

"You're welcome to read them in my library," replied the neighbor, ungraciously, "but it is my rule never to let my books leave my house."

Some weeks later the same neighbor sent over to ask for the loan of Mark Twain's lawn-mower.

"Certainly," said Mark, "but since I make it a rule never to let leave my lawn, you will be obliged to use it there."

HEALTH

ARTHRITIS.

The disease arthritis, the name of which simply means inflammation of a joint, may be acute or chronic. The acute form arises from a variety of causes, internal or external; that is to say, it may be the accompaniment of some general disease or it may be due to an injury.

When it arises from an injury, it is the simplest form of acute joint inflammation, and the easiest to cure; but the patient must be sure that it really is caused by injury alone, and is not associated with some unhealthy process going on in the body.

Very often a person, although he harbors in his body the poison of rheumatism or gout or tuberculosis, is otherwise in so good a condition of general health that his tissues are able to resist the assaults of the disease, and so remains apparently well. But if he meets with some accident by which a joint is wrenched or strained, the resisting power of that part is weakened, and the disease settles in it. In that case, the injury merely gives an opportunity for the tuberculosis or other disease to develop, and the resulting inflammation is proportionately serious.

The symptoms of acute arthritis, say of the knee, are those generally characteristic of inflammation, namely, pain, swelling, increased heat of the part, and sometimes redness.

The swelling is due to an outpouring of fluid into the joint—hydrops it used to be called by an older generation. It forces the sufferer to hold his knee slightly bent. He instinctively keeps the joint very still, for the slightest movement causes extreme pain.

The treatment of acute arthritis should vary according to the stage of the inflammation. Treatment begun immediately after the injury will sometimes prevent swelling and shorten the duration of the disease. The joint should be firmly bandaged, kept perfectly still, and cold applications made. Later, after swelling has occurred, hot applications are better, and often quickly relieve the pain. Gentle rubbing will help the swelling to disappear, after which more vigorous massage may be used, and the joint may be cautiously moved a little from time to time, until free and painless movement is restored.

If there is no underlying constitutional taint, recovery from an acute arthritis is usually complete, but often weeks or months elapse after the injury before the sufferer is entirely free from occasional twinges and other reminders of his mishap.—Youth's Companion.

WEIGHT AND HEALTH.

Better be Over the Average When Young and Under When Old.

At the twenty-first annual meeting of the Association of Life Insurance Directors some facts were brought out in regard to the best build of men and women from the insurance man's point of view.

In a big Life Insurance Company efforts have been going on for many years to determine the exact influence of build on longevity, says the Medical Record. It is suggested that a mistake has been made in assuming that the average build at any age is the most favorable build at that age or the build from which it may be expected the most favorable mortality will be sustained.

For instance, figures show that at the age of 20 all risks from 24 per cent. overweight to 10 per cent. underweight are better than average risks. Does it not then seem probable that the point of most favorable build is about half way from 24 per cent. overweight to 10 per cent. underweight, or in the neighborhood of 7 per cent. overweight? If this inference is correct the tables now used are too favorable to the underweights by about 7 per cent.

At age 60, on the other hand, the super-standard risks begin at about 8 per cent. overweight and extend to about 22 per cent. underweight. The mean point between these extremes lies at about 7 per cent. underweight and the conclusion appears evident that the present table based on average weights is too high by about 7 per cent. At the intermediate ages, 30 to 50, the mean point lies not at the zero but on the heavyweight side of the zero at the age of 30 and at the lightweight side of the zero at the age of 50, and only at the age of 40 is the table apparently correct.

ONE PIE FOR 70 GUESTS.

Seventy guests banqueted on a single pie at Gorleston, and there was plenty to spare when they had finished, says London Sketch. The pie was a hundredweight and a half. It was made in three sections or water tight compartments and each hold had a substantial bulkhead of crust. Its interior was packed with six rabbits, six kidneys, twenty-eight pounds of beefsteak and potatoes, turnips, carrots and sprouts. The sea pie, as it is called, is boiled, not baked, and its builder, Skipper Harman, made the cooking process an eight hours watch. This three decker provided a savory meal which more than satisfied the guests, and its wrecked and dismantled hull provided ten gallons of excellent soup that was gladly welcomed by the poor of Gorleston.

be persuaded by God himself. Outwardly, they have a hard forehead; not a muscle in their faces twitches before the condemning truth. Inwardly, they are stiff of heart; there is no yielding of will or feeling.

9. Fear them not—It is not the business of a prophet to measure out his message according to the disposition, to receive or reject it, of those who hear. If they are rebellious, still let him speak, for in the long run his truth is bound to prevail. What inspired Ezekiel with unshrinking courage was the fact that the words were God's words, not his. Compare Jer. 5. 3 and Isa. 50. 7, for the figure of the flint. Whether the people hear or forbear (11), the purpose of God's servant is to remain as unyielding as the hardest rock.

GOD'S LOVE FOR

Jesus Was His Chief Happiness of

Love has been called blind. That is because it will not and cannot see faults.

So men have despised love and boasted of intellect, which, they say, can discern the truth better.

And herein men simply display their ignorance and show that they do not know what truth is nor what knowing is.

For a living truth, or the truth about a living thing, was never yet perceived by any brain. Mind can see dead truths, such as that two and two make four, or that here is a book and there is a man, and all such things that have to do merely with material and inanimate propositions; but truths that grow in the human spirit are only visible to the eye of love.

Whoever loves, sees; and whoever sees, sees only things lovely. For the soul of a human being is essentially beautiful, and only the love ray can reveal it.

This is proved by the fact that wherever we find love in its purest and intensest form you find always that it has this glorifying effect.

IN THREE INSTANCES

you will find love at its best.

First, in the love of a mother for her young child. This affection cannot see evil. The mother kisses the crippled feet, yearns over the weak will, and sees beneath all naughtiness to a substratum of charm invisible to you and me.

Second, in the first love of a man and a maid. No matter how gross or common to our unlit eyes the girl may be, her lover things her an angel. So this sex love, when raised to its spiritual potency, is the most wonderful of all discoveries. To the infatuated lover she is a perfect being; any are but eccentricities of divinity no one but he understands. He would not change her in any least way, lest she should cease to be she, and so be less a miracle. This is not folly, was purely a religious one. Few hints are given us of the life of the people in captivity. In fact, almost uniformly, Ezekiel seems to be looking beyond his companions to the larger Israel scattered throughout the world.

12. The spirit lifted me—This indicates that the prophet is still under the influence of the trance described in chapter 1. He has been accorded a vision of his relation to his own people as a spokesman of Jehovah. And now, under the inspiration of the Spirit still, he is set down among his fellow exiles. So it seems to him that the glory of Jehovah, in whose presence he had been standing, was left behind him. And the Spirit departs as with the noise of rushing chariots.

14. The hand of Jehovah was strong upon me—Ezekiel's mission was performed under a divine, inescapable constraint. His bitterness and heat are but a reflection of the indignation which his Lord felt toward the sinful, obstinate Israelites.

15. Then I came—He was strengthened with a threefold equipment; the possession of a divinely given message, the assurance that he went as a prophet direct from God (verse 11), and the consciousness of an inward impulse of the Spirit driving him forward. That is equipment enough for any man. But, in spite of all this, Ezekiel felt himself overwhelmed as he sat in the very presence of them of the captivity. His feelings were complex as he thought of the sin of his own nation, now made clearer, the awful majesty of an indignant God, and the superhuman task before him. No wonder he remained in unbroken silence for an entire week.

16-21.—Ezekiel's further mission.

17. I have made these a watchman—This is only a more exact definition of his prophetic function. Like the sentinel who is set upon the tower to observe, and to give warning in case of danger, so the prophet was too take account of the present crisis in Israel, and warn the people of certain disaster, while he should point them to the way of life.

18. His blood—It is the function of the watchman to give fair warning to the wicked of the danger of death. If he fail, then, though the wicked die in his sins, the watchman must answer for it. "He that fails to save life kills; and blood will be required of him, of every man's hand the blood of his brother."

20. When a righteous man doth turn—His case makes even more perilous the watchman's position of responsibility. If the righteous sin, he must be warned. Otherwise, he may fall over the stumblingblock which God, for purposes of moral test, puts in his path (not that he may fall, of course, but may have opportunities of moral growth). Moreover, it is important for the watchman to keep on warning the righteous man who does not sin, because until the end of his days, he will be beset with peril (21).

22-27.—From here on to the end of chapter 7 follow certain symbolical prophecies of the overthrow of the city and nation. These verses form a sort of preface, relating to the command given Ezekiel to abandon for a time his sacred work and keep within his own house.

POSTAGE STAMPS THAT HAVE CAUSED SENSATIONS.

King George's Head Does Not Show Very Well on the New English Stamps.

Artists are not pleased with the new issue of stamps. They say that the King's head is a poor likeness, that a profile would have been preferable to the three-quarter face, and that the die, with its multitude of fine lines, is not adapted for the rapid printing, and gives a smudgy impression, says London Answers.

Oddly enough, almost exactly the same objections were made to the new Italian stamps when King Victor Emanuel first ascended the throne. This die gave a full face portrait, and the impressions were not as distinct as they might have been.

But there was no discussion about them. The King said simply, "They won't do. Make a new die," and his orders were carried out on the spot. A new portrait was taken in profile, a new die made, and there was an end of it.

As any stamp-collector can tell you, no Post Office is infallible. Errors in printing stamps exist in numbers, and such errors add greatly to the value of the wrongly-printed stamps.

COSTLY COLOR CONFUSIONS.

For instance, a single sheet of the four cent Columbian stamps of the United States was accidentally printed in the light blue of the one cent value, instead of their own dark blue. A lucky collector captured the whole sheet, and sold them all for $30 each.

About the same time the U.S. postal authorities issued some two cent penny stamps, with a picture of a train upon them. In one sheet of these the train was accidentally printed upside-down, and, the error not being noticed, the sheet was sent to Brooklyn.

Oddly enough, all but about a dozen of these stamps were retailed without anyone noticing the mistake. Then a man who was not a collector bought the remainder, and wrote to Washington about them. A collector heard of it, and took train to Brooklyn. He found the man who had written, and discovered that he only had six stamps left. He gave him $20 for the lot, and later sold them for $40 apiece.

The famous four cent Blue Mauritius, for one specimen of which our present King paid $7,250, is an error stamp. The proper wording, "Post Paid, Mauritius," had somehow been altered to "Post Office, Mauritius."

The penny Cape of Good Hope, which fetched $1,000 recently, is worth that sum because, instead of being red, as it should be,

ITS COLOR IS BLUE.

Speaking of the color of stamps, our own Post Office once made a queer mistake. About ten years ago some green halfpennies were issued which, when touched by any faintly acid solution, would quickly turn blue.

GOOD BREAD.

A recipe for beginners: To make good bread you must use good flour and yeast. The best flour you can buy is the most economical, as then not a scrap is wasted. To set the sponge put one cake of fresh compressed yeast to soak in one-half cup of warm water; while soaking boil three medium size potatoes until thoroughly cooked, lift out into a crock and mash until every lump has disappeared, then add slowly one pint of cold water and stir until perfectly blended. Then add enough luke warm water (including the yeast and water in which it was soaked) to make two quarts of the liquid. Stir in enough sifted flour to make a stiff batter and beat thoroughly. Never use water potatoes were boiled in for sponge, as it is slightly bitter, also never put salt or sugar in sponge, as there is greater danger of it souring.

In real hot weather mix the sponge as late at night as convenient and use cold instead of warm water. The yeast may be put to soak and potatoes cooked at supper time, care being taken to mash them while hot, otherwise they will be lumpy. After the sponge has been beaten thoroughly set in a warm place to raise. To mix the bread: In the morning sift four quarts of flour into a large round pan or mixing bowl and make a hollow in the center, in which pour the sponge. Into the crock just emptied put two pints of luke warm water (or if in winter use sweet milk), two scant tablespoons of salt, three heaping tablespoons of sugar, and one of butter; mix thoroughly, taking care to wash the sides of crock free from batter. Add this mixture to the sponge and fold in enough flour to make a stiff dough.

Have your kneading board well floured, lift out the dough and run the remaining flour through the sieve; add the siftings to the dough and knead thoroughly, using enough flour from time to time to keep dough from sticking. Knead until perfectly smooth and can be handled without the use of dry flour and when laid on board will not hold its shape—that is, if it has a tendency to flatten out, add more flour. Should the dough persist in flattening after a reasonable amount of flour has been used either the yeast or flour is not good. Dough that makes good bread will rise in a globular form the first kneading until finished. After the dough is ready to let raise, wash the crock the sponge was in, scald it out (this warms the crock nicely) dry thoroughly, use enough sweet lard to grease the crock well, but not too much, as you will have trouble forming the loaves. Cover lightly and set to raise in a warm place out of a draft.

When light don't knead it, but simply fold the dough from the sides to center of crock and push down until of the original bulk thoroughly, add one cupful sugar. Fill up the cup containing the gelatin with hot water. Add to the beaten whites of eggs and sugar, beat twenty minutes; flavor with grated pineapple or any desired fruit; mold and serve cold. This is excellent to serve with angel food cake. It should be eaten the day it is prepared. The above recipe will serve six or seven people.

SOUR MILK RECIPES.

Curds and Cream.—One gallon of milk will make a moderate dish. Put one spoonful of prepared rennet to each quart of milk and when you find that it has become curd tie it loosely in a thin cloth and hang it to drain. Do not wring or press the cloth; when drained put the curd into a mug and set in cool water, which must be frequently changed (a refrigerator saves the trouble). When you dish it, if there is whey in the mug ladle it gently and without pressing the curd; lay it in a deep dish and pour fresh cream over it. Have powdered loaf sugar to eat with it. Prepared rennet can be had at almost any druggist's and at a reasonable price.

Bonny Clabber.—This dish is in perfection in the summer when milk sours and thickens very quickly. It should be cold when served. A nice way is to pour the milk before it has thickened into a glass dish, and when thick set on ice for an hour or two, and it is ready to serve and is really a very pretty addition to the supper table. Serve in sauce dishes or deep dessert plates; sprinkle with sugar (maple is nice), and a little grated nutmeg is nice.

OLD-FASHIONED RECIPES.

Spice Cake.—One egg, one cupful sour milk, one cupful sugar, one teaspoonful soda, one-half cupful of butter, two cupfuls of flour, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, two teaspoonfuls cloves, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of vanilla.

Soft Ginger Bread.—One cup of molasses, four tablespoons of melted butter, one teaspoon of soda, one cup of warm water, two cups of flour, one teaspoonful each of ginger and cinnamon. Add two well beaten eggs the last things before baking.

Corn Bread.—One cup of cornmeal, one cup of flour, one cup of sweet milk, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, two eggs, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt.

Chicken Pie.—Cut up chicken; place in hot water enough to cover, as it boils away add more, so as to have enough for the pie and for plenty of gravy to serve with it, and boil until tender. Line the sides of a pan with a rich biscuit dough a quarter of an inch thick, then fill with the chicken and a thick gravy well seasoned with

25. They shall lay bands upon thee—His ministry among the exiles will be without fruit because of the opposition of sin-hardened hearts. No doubt Ezekiel had already experienced the truth of this, although nothing is recorded of his ministry in these early days at Tel-Abib. But it was as he had expected, they refused to believe his testimony concerning the inevitable downfall of the city.

26. Thou shalt be dumb—This was a restraint put upon him by Jehovah, and one that was to be lifted by Jehovah only at such times as he should choose. Eventually there will be some who will hear (27), and to him that forbeareth, he will at any rate have delivered his soul (21).

FOR HUMANITY

Chief Contribution to the Mass of the Race

That nor blindness. It is insight. For any one of us is precisely so beautiful and glorious and majestic, if any one could be found who would love us enough to detect it.

For awhile, at least, it is given to us, in the passion of youth, to see another soul as angels see souls. There never yet was love enough in this world. God send more!

The third instance is God's love for the human soul. The revelation of this, the emphasis he placed upon this, is Jesus' chief contribution to the happiness of the race. For, singularly enough, it is the reverse of all the creeds,

IS TRUER THAN THE CREEDS.

God's faith in me is more saturated with redemptive potency than my faith in him. The thought that infinite goodness can and does love me is the flame that lights my love to him; as it is written: "The spirit of a man is the candle of the Lord."

What the world needs is trust, or rather to be trusted. Slowly and through painful years and centuries of intellectual stupidity we are to learn that children are to be made better by believing in them and appreciating them rather than by flogging and scolding; that criminals can only be cured by trusting them, never by punishing them; that nations are best conquered by disarmament and defenseless confidence, more certainly than by armies; and that sinful men are to be won to worship and morality by revealing to them through love their own dignity as God's beloved, rather than by threats and curses; that while Sinai and the white thunders of the law drive men to despair, Calvary and the revelation of divine love lifts them to nobleness.

Love is not blind. Love is the only thing that sees.

queer mistake. About ten years ago some green halfpennies were issued which, when touched by any faintly acid solution, would quickly turn blue.

Sometimes, but not very often, one discovers a blunder in a postmark. A letter posted as Stoke-under-Ham on December 12th, 1907, and received on the 13th, was found to bear the postmark date December 21st. The figures in an office stamp are altered by unscrewing the back before each fresh stamping. In this case, the figure "9" must have been accidentally dropped in before the "1."

By such mistakes time is sometimes annihilated. A postcard from Penarth, received one evening at five o'clock at Crouch End, according to its postmark, had not been handed in till nine o'clock the same evening. Apparently, therefore, it had taken four hours less than no time to reach its destination.

Trimnings placed directly at the back are seen on many of the smartest hats.

The wider skirts now have the authority of the great costumers of Paris.

Cut crystal is one of the trimming articles strongly indicated for fall and winter.

Tailored skirts are to be both gored and plaited—the latter in clusters near the foot.

Tailored dresses of serge and other light weight woollens will be conspicuous among autumn fashions.

ly thoroughly, use enough sweet lard to grease the crock well, but not too much, as you will have trouble forming the loaves. Cover lightly and set to raise in a warm place out of a draft.

When light don't knead it, but simply fold the dough from the sides to center of crock and push down until of the original bulk, then with both hands pick up the dough and turn it over, keeping all the rough places under. When light again it is ready for the pans. You will find pie tins are much nicer for bread than the long pan. The loaves will be much more evenly baked, will not dry out so soon, also there is a small "heel." Grease four pie-tins thoroughly and your hands lightly, don't knead, but with your hands pinch the dough into two equal parts and divide again into quarters. Keep the outside of the dough as it raised, for the outside of the loaves, tuck under all the "raw" edges, pat out all large air cells on top of loaf should there be any, form into round balls, handling as little as possible and place in the tins to raise. When twice their size they are ready for the oven.

Bake one hour in a slow oven. Should you use gas or gasoline turn the flame quite low, say about half the force, for the first fifteen minutes, to give the bread a chance to raise quite light before a crust is formed, then increase the heat, using great care and not get the oven too hot. At the end of a half hour turn the loaves around and exchange places from the upper to lower rack, so all four will be evenly baked on the bottom. At the end of an hour they should be a golden brown. An old tablecloth makes an ideal bread cloth. Fold two thicknesses lengthwise and lay on a table. Remove from tins and arrange the loaves near one end in the position in which they were baked (never stand new bread on edge or upside down), cover with four thicknesses of the cloth and tuck under the edges. If you do all this you will have delicious bread with a tender crust.

ELECTRICITY ON THE FARM.

A Satisfactory Test in West Oxford.

A despatch from Ingersoll, says:—A highly satisfactory test with Hydro-electric power was made on the farm of Mr. John Prouse, West Oxford, when a large number gathered to witness the process of silo-filling by the aid of the current. Among those in attendance was Hon. Adam Beck, Chairman of the Hydro-electric Commission, the Ingersoll Power & Light Commissioners, and a number of representative farmers. Mr. Prouse has installed an equipment which is being operated by Niagara power, and which worked very satisfactorily in Friday's test. Mr. Prouse has had his residence wired, as well as his barns and out-buildings, even to the milk-house, probably being the first farmer in western Ontario to adopt the "white coal" for agricultural purposes.

A despatch from Brantford, says:—Brantford's Skating Arena on Waterloo street, the largest of its kind in western Ontario, caught fire at 7.15 on Thursday morning, and within ten minutes was a roaring mass of flames and smoke, the fire spreading to a dozen houses adjoining, two of which were entirely destroyed and a half dozen others badly scorched. The firemen were for some time utterly unable to control the flames, which spread in four directions from the very hot blaze which the big wooden structure made. In addition, two frame barns within the block also were destroyed. Early reports of the damage place the loss at $15,000, partially covered by insurance.

A horse, one of a team tethered fifteen or twenty feet away, was killed instantly, being struck on the head by a piece of the boiler.

MAKING SAFE INVESTMENTS

SHOWING THAT 80 PER CENT. OF SPECULATORS LOSE MONEY.

A Further Digression from the Subject of Pure Investment to Give Some Interesting Facts on Speculation—The Best Advice to Prospective Speculators is Don't.

(By Investor.)

In the last issue we saw in what points speculation differed from investments. The practical difference between investment, it was seen, was largely one in chance of gain, whereas the investor almost always insists on great safety at the expense of probability of largely increased value of his holdings, the speculator sacrifices everything to his chance of profit or loss.

Now, unfortunately, many speculators find that the old proverb, "Distance lends enchantment," equally applicable to speculation, and, therefore, dabble in the New York market. As a matter of actual experience, in the long run it is quite as profitable—and probably less expensive—to put your money on a horse race. You probably know something about horses. You can never know enough about the New York market to make it worth while. The writer has been a number of years in the stock business before taking to the more modest but less nerve-racking business of writing and can speak with some authority. But, of course, the reader will not accept such a bold statement without some good reasons being advanced.

Quite recently, a New York broker carefully analyzed a large number of accounts on his books and discovered, much to his surprise, that eight out of every ten of his clients lost money; eighty per cent. of speculators eventually lose, is what he learned.

"Yet," you say, "Morgan and Rockefeller often make a million dollar 'clean up,' and why couldn't the small speculator make a few dollars?" Unquestion-

Young Folks

PAULO.

In sunny Italy there lived a boy named Paulo. He was the son of a poor widow, who made and sold fine lace, in order that she and her little boy might live. But often she could get no work to do, and they suffered from hunger.

At sunrise Paulo would take a basket and go out on the hills and cut fresh flowers. When his basket was full, he would sit in the shade of some whispering tree, to arrange them to take to the market-place and sell.

Paulo loved the flowers and the trees, and especially the birds. He knew each bird by its song, and sometimes he would sing with them in a voice so sweet and clear that they would stop and chirp inquiringly. But Paulo did not know that he had a beautiful voice, and he never sang save when alone.

One day Paulo sat on the edge of the fountain in the market-place and wept. The hot sun was withering his unsold flowers. His mother lay sick at home, and there was no bread. Very sadly he picked up his basket and started across the square.

As Paulo was passing the cathedral he paused. One of the side doors was ajar, and from within came the sound of music. It was time for the choir rehearsal. Paulo could not resist the temptation. A moment more and he was crouched in the cool shadow of a huge arch, while from the high altar came the roll of the organ and the chant of the choir-boys.

Sometimes the music grew loud and stormy. Sometimes it was soft, like the wind among the treetops after dark, or the tiny clasp of waves among the rocks. Paulo forgot that he was hungry, and listened with his hands clasped. How he wished that he might be a choir-boy, and wear a white robe and sing near the high altar!

By and by the music stopped. The choir-boys went away, and the great church was quiet. Paulo left the shadow and crept along the marble aisle. He thought of only two things—that the church was empty, and that he, too, must go up into the altar. He climbed up to the highest place and began to sing. Higher and higher his voice rose, until it echoed among the topmost arches.

Once again the church was quiet as Paulo, trembling with fear, stole down from the altar. At the foot of the stairs he stopped—terrified. The great bishop was standing in the shadow of an arch, watching him. Sobbing with fright, Paulo fell to his knees; he heard the voice of the bishop saying, gently:

"You have a beautiful voice, my son. Tell me who you are."

Gathering courage, he rose and told him all.

Happy days followed. The good bishop did not forget the little lad, and through his influence, help reached the poor widow. Paulo was sent to school, and at service time, dressed in a long white robe, he sang in his own place among the choir-boys. Strangers in the church, hearing his voice above the others, would listen, charmed, and predict a great future for him.—Youth's Companion.

AN APPALLING DISASTER

Four Hundred Members of the Crew of a French Warship Dead or Missing

A despatch from Toulon, France, says: The first-class battleship Liberte, one of the finest in the French fleet, blew up and sank while at anchor in the roadstead here on Monday morning. It is estimated that 300 officers and sailors were killed aboard the Liberte and 20 killed and 50 injured aboard the Democratie. There were also many casualties aboard the other warships in the harbor, especially the Verite and Republique. The latter was so badly damaged that she had to be towed into dock.

The explosion, which wiped out one of France's newest and most powerful battleships, occurred at 5.53 o'clock in the morning. It was preceded by and was the result of an outbreak of fire. The flames spread rapidly in spite of all efforts to master them, and reached the magazines before there was time to flood them. The magazines exploded with tremendous violence, sowing death and destruction in every direction.

While the naval authorities estimate the killed at 300, it is feared that this figure will be exceeded. It will be necessary to go through the ship's muster rolls, a task of some days, before a full list of the victims can be prepared. A number of men have already been extricated alive from the fantastically torn and twisted mass of wreckage which was once the Liberte, and the hope is strong that there are others within the broken hulk who can be reached.

Exactly from what cause or when the fire broke out has not been established, but it is believed that it had smouldered for several hours. Of the vessel's full complement of 742, Capt. Jaures, brother of the Socialist leader, and the second officer in command, were both ashore on leave, as well as 140 officers and men. The command of the ship devolved on the senior lieutenant, who perished.

ATE HEADS OF MATCHES.

Montreal Woman Dies in Hospital as a Result.

A despatch from Montreal says: Mrs. Gaston Jacobs, of 1645 East Ontario Street, died on Wednesday in the Royal Victoria Hospital despite the efforts of the staff. The woman, who was 25 years of age, had eaten the heads off a number of sulphur matches, which she had got into the habit of chewing, and the chemical diet resulted in her death from poisoning.

CRUISER'S GUN EXPLODED.

Fourteen People Killed on Board the Gloire.

A despatch from Toulon, France, says: Fourteen persons were killed by the explosion of a gun on board the armored cruiser Gloire during gunnery practice here on Wednesday. The Gloire is of 1,600 tons displacement and has a speed of 21 knots.

RELIEF OF CHANGTU.

A despatch from Chungking, says:—Chengtu, the capital of Szechuen, which has been under siege by revolutionary forces for several fully analyzed a large number of accounts on his books and discovered, much to his surprise, that eight out of every ten of his clients lost money; eighty per cent. of speculators eventually lose, is what he learned.

"Yet," you say, "Morgan and Rockefeller often make a million dollar 'clean up,' and why couldn't the small speculator make a few dollars?" Unquestionably, if the small speculator knew what Mr. Morgan was doing in the stock market he could make money and "big" money, too. But that is the whole difficulty. The game is to guess what Morgan, or some one else, is doing—and your guess is as good as mine. Mr. Morgan is either going to put prices up or down—or he is leaving them to the will of natural conditions. There is the old shell game of the country fair to the life. The pea is under one of the shells—or between two of the operator's fingers.

But even if you guess what one group of New York's financial giants want to do you may find you lose because another and stronger group want to do the opposite, and the upper and nether mill-stones grind your margins out of your pocket until you give up in despair—perhaps to see that your judgment is right and that had you had the ability to "stay by the game" you might have won out.

Then, suppose Mr. Morgan and all others were not influencing the market, you have to judge how general conditions, money markets in London, New York and France are going to affect things; what the crops will be; how industries are doing. You may judge correctly to find—as at present—France and Germany at each others' throats, and the market collapsing through fear of the effects on business of a war. Verily 80 per cent of losers is surprisingly low; and remember: of the 20 per cent. of those who don't lose are those who know what is going on—directors who take advantage of advance knowledge, managers familiar with the businesses in which they happen to speculate and some of their friends.

If you must speculate, therefore, remember the political slogan, "Canada for the Canadians." Here things are not on the same scale as in New York. Canada is a growing country, her industries are growing, and her companies held in respect. So far we have suffered from trade depressions only slightly in comparison with the States. And, last and by far the most important, YOU ARE ON THE SPOT. You can, if occasion demands, go to the office of the companies in whose shares you wish to speculate and find out for yourself, perhaps, what the prospects are. Or your broker may know from first hand information. In short, your chances are better.

But in speculating, this should be borne in mind. Remember that the smaller the margin the greater the risk. A two per cent. margin is only accepted by "bucket-shops" who can only make money if you lose. Legitimate brokers will not do business on a less than ten point margin, and very few even at that. Twenty points is fairly safe, but only within the past few months, one popular Canadian stock has dropped 12 points, and C. P. R. over 25. Therefore, when you speculate do so on a substantial margin and be prepared to back up your first margin with more; otherwise, although your judgment may be correct in the long run, you may never have a chance to give it a fair test—you may be forced to sell on some unexpected drop due to conditions which no one could foresee, and whose effect would be merely temporary. However, the best advice to those who are thinking of speculating is this: "Don't."

The total sum stolen was $272,000. If all is recovered, the lucky detectives will divide $27,000 in addition to the $5,000.

GREAT UPHEAVAL IN SPAIN

Strikes Are Spreading, and Numerous Arrests Have Been Made.

A despatch from Madrid says: The Government, acting under the Royal decree of Tuesday suspending the constitutional guarantees because of revolutionary activity, has ordered the arrest of working-men's committees and political agitators in the disturbed districts. Three hundred persons were imprisoned in this city on Wednesday night. Among those arrested here was Senor Largo Caballero, general counsel for and Vice-President of the General Union of Labor. His offices were closed. The military has taken into its keeping arms and munitions of every description which were on sale. At Barcelona 153 persons were apprehended and many were taken into custody at Bilbao, Seville, Valencia and Saragossa. The revolutionaries apparently are still in possession of Jativa, toward which troops are marching from Valencia. At Jativa and Carcagente rioters set fire to the public buildings and tore up the railway tracks. There has been trouble at Amurrio.

A continuous down pour of rain all day Wednesday spoiled the annual fall show at Tamworth. Give Credit Where it Belongs

In last week's issue of the Beaver the Secretary of the Conservative Association Mr. G. F. Rutlan, is credited as being Secretary of that Association for the past 25 years and having never lost an election. Now if memory serves us right, Mr. Morley Wilson and the late Mr. Alfred Holmes both filled that office during that time, also Mr. Wilson was defeated by the late Mr. D. W. Allison and Bowen E. Aylsworth defeated Dr. Meacham, also the self same Sec'y has suffered defeat several times in the council as well as for mayor. Surely the result of the elections at all times are in some little measure due to the choice of candidates and the voice of the electors who really decide elections.

Two Sisters Wedded

On Wednesday morning at eleven o'clock, Miss Olive Beatrice Robinson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. N. Robinson, South Napanee, was united in marriage to Mr. Arthur Fellows, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Fellows. Rev. M. Sexsmith, an uncle of the bride, performed the ceremony, assisted by Rev. G. W. McColl. Only a few immediate relatives and friends of the contracting parties were present. After a sumptuous wedding breakfast Mr. and Mrs. Fellows left for Montreal and other eastern points after which they will reside at the home recently purchased by Mr. Fellows on Adelphi street.

In the afternoon at 3 o'clock, Miss Lottie Robinson, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Robinson, was united in marriage to Mr. John Q. Brandon, of Humboldt, Sask., formerly of Richmond. Rev. Mr. Sexsmith also performed this ceremony and Mr. and Mrs. Brandon left for their future home in Humboldt, Sask. Both of the newly wedded couples are well-known in Napanee where all of them have been deservedly popular, though Mr. Brandon has been in the west for the past few years.

JAMES WALTERS,

Merchant Tailoring, Napanee.

Always the cookbook says:
"Sift Your Flour."

No lumps, you see. Aerates the flour, making it lighter.

Put FIVE ROSES in your sifter.

Never soft and sticky — never lumpy, musty, woolly.

Never coarse.

Milled superfine from Manitoba's grandest wheat.

Fine, granular, very dry.

Nothing remains in the sifter—FIVE ROSES is free, heavy.

And your bread is more porous, more yielding, more appetizing.

And more Digestible.

Because the particles are finer, easier to get at by the stomach juices.

Use this very fine flour—superfine.
